MURDER CAMPAIGN BRIEFLY SKETCHED

In effect the German note to the United States, published Thursday, declares a blockade of the British Isles, the French coast and certain portions of the coast of Holland. It leaves a route for steamers engaged in transatlantic and other deep-seas trade to the open neutral ports of Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland by way of a designated sea lane extending from the Faroe Islands to a point near the Norwegian coast, thence southerly past the Danish and Dutch coasts to the Terschelling Lightship. There is no open entrance to the English Channel under this scheme. The Germans propose to prevent all traffic farther east than Falmouth. American transatlantic steamers will be permitted to ply only on conditions laid down by the Germans. They will be permitted to land and embark passengers at Falmouth, but will be within the danger zone if they proceed therefrom up the English channel. All vessels plying between American ports Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland must use the northerly route around by the Faroe Islands.

The Germans have also served a notice on Britain which means that they intend to sink all hospital ships plying between France, Belgium and Britain in the waters of the North Sea lying south of a line drawn from Flamborough Head due eastward to the Dutch coast, and in the English Channel from a point between Land's End and the French coast near Brest. This means that all wounded must be shipped from Brest or French ports south of it, and must be landed at ports in the west of England or Scotland instead of ports in the English Channel and the North Sea. The excuse given is that such vessels have been used to transport munitions and troops. This charge the British Government vigorously denies, and adds that "if the threat is carried out reprisals will immediately be taken by the British authorities concerned."

THE GRAND REVUE FOR RED CROSS WORK.

Monday and Tuesday nights are the nights for the 1917 Revue, under auspices of the U.E.L., I.O.D.B. benefit of Red Cross work. It will be a splendid performance each night, and you'll not only contribute to a cause near to your hearts, but have an evening of great pleasure. A large cast of Napanee's best local talent, under the direction of Anna Lilyan Dunkel, who brings with her the leads for several of the numbers, Margery Healy, a most charming clever little soubrette, and W. H. Gaylord, Jr., designer of the big munition works at Trenton. Of Mr. Gaylord The Trenton Courier says: "Mr. Gaylord proved to the audience his ability to lead in theatrical productions as ably as he directs the construction of one of the largest munition plants in America." Mr. D. H. Green, an impersonator, will appear as "Agusta Prim," the deaf old maid. With splendid stage effect, special scenery, and electric light effects, good costuming, and best of talent, the people of Napanee are assured of an evening of genuine enjoyment.

WILTON

Our people need the good road system here. Traffic of all kinds is slow on account of the recent storms.

The P.F.E., people were much disappointed on Friday evening last, as Mr. Storms, of Kingston, was unavoidably detained, his mother who has been quite ill for a number of weeks, being taken much worse. A pleasant night with Jean Mitchell was expected. Hope some time in the near future Mr. Storms will be able to give us the treat.

Mr. Wallace continues very low.

Mrs. Sperry Shibley was called to the bedside of her mother on Friday last.

The Young People's Mission Band was held in the league room on Saturday. A concert in connection with the band is being talked of.

The Red Cross was held at Mr. Guy Simmons' home on Friday last. A goodly number present. The next meeting of the Society will be held at the home of Mrs. John Carr.

The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, of Belleville, former pastor of this place, was renewing acquaintances last week.

The chief notice is whether the cheese factory will be operated by the milk test system, or pooled as formerly.

Mr. Blake Switzer, who has been taking a short course at the Agricultural College, Guelph, returned home on Thursday of last week.

Our young people are arranging for a Dramatic Club.

Word has just been received of the death of Mr. Bullock, of Lynn, he being well and favorably known by many of elderly people here, having married a Miss Lucinda Thompson, of this place, who predeceased him a number of years ago.

Mrs. Charles Stover is not improving as fast as we would like to have her. The last week she has suffered much from the effects of quinsy. Dr. Mabee in attendance.

Britain Well Prepared For Ruthless Warfare

New York, Jan. 31.—Great Britain and her allies are prepared to meet Germany's moves in her submarine campaign, it was authoritatively asserted in shipping circles here to-night. The Entente powers were convinced weeks ago that ruthless warfare with undersea boats would be decreed sooner or later, and have known for ten days that the decision had been reached, it is said.

The ports of Liverpool and Bordeaux will be kept open at all hazards, British steamship representatives asserted, even if it becomes necessary to convoy every merchant ship which crosses the Atlantic. The first step to be taken by the British Admiralty, which virtually controls the merchant fleets of the allies, will be to arm every ship with guns fore and aft for defensive purposes, it was predicted.

To meet the emergency which it was confidently expected would arise eventually, the British Government has been assembling for months, it was said, a large fleet of small fast cruisers to be used as "submarine chasers." This type of warcraft has proven very effective against undersea boats, well-informed shipping men declared.

SEA LANES WILL BE CLEAR
Agents of the British lines declared the Admiralty now has a fleet of 4,000 vessels available to keep the sea lanes clear of raiders and submarines and to act as convoys.

The Admiralty has so arranged sailings and bookings, it was explained, that they can be changed without delay to meet whatever circumstances may arise. The assertion was made that there will be no interruption in the sailings from American ports of ships flying the flags of the Entente allies.

It was considered probable, however, that vessels flying neutral colors will be kept in port until instructions are received from their Governments. This is certain to be true in the case of Dutch ships.

ANSON MCKIM IS KILLED BY A TRAIN.

Mr. Anson McKim, one of the best known and most respected citizens of Montreal, was struck and instantly killed by a train at Coteau Junction Thursday morning of last week. Mr. McKim had been intending to go to Ottawa for some days, and apparently had taken the Toronto train in mistake, getting off at Coteau Junction to transfer to the other train. Mr. McKim was in his sixty-third year, born near Napanee, of United Empire Loyalist stock. He was married October 1st, 1884, to Bessie True, daughter of Honourable Geo. W. True, of Portland, Me. Mrs. McKim and a daughter survive him. Mr. McKim first went to Montreal in 1878 as the representative of the Toronto Mail. In 1889 he established the advertising agency of A. McKim & Co., and in January, 1907, the business was turned into a limited company, taking into the organization Mr. J. N. McKim, his brother; and others. The funeral was held on Saturday afternoon from the house, 25 McGregor St. Montreal.

CAPTURED MANY

British Made Surprise During Storm.

Stroke Was Well Planned. General Haig's Troops Gained the Objectives Attack German Casualties Were Heavy, Over 350 Prisoners Taken, and British Losses Slight.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—In the hard weather condition a tank attack was made Saturday by British troops against a strong point on the Somme, in its capture with three of more than 300 men. The apparently did not anticipate and were somewhat owing perhaps to the heavy and strong blizzard sweeping the snow-covered field. The remained snarly in their probably believing that they would do the same.

Outwardly there was no within the British lines, but trenches the troops were with a sudden attack, which were well prepared for and organized. Suddenly, the desultory fire of the British was concentrated in a terrible fire, flinging shells of explosive force upon the trenches and defensive works.

The barbed wire before man positions was cut as sharp shears. Following a chain of fire, the English troops briskly out into "No Man's Land." The breath of the men look smokecloud as they went a field of hummocky snow and craters filled with solid ice.

The British troops had fresh with the heat, they moved forward like a and carried out the operation with precision and self-control.

The Germans were trapped in dugouts. The English over and around the positions the Germans could get up them or fire upon them with guns. The whole garrison strong point surrendered without a fight, seemingly that resistance was useless. British troops suffered fatalities and sent back the triumph.

Meanwhile, the Germans had seen signals of distress, evidently they became aware that the strong point had turned. They came out of their holes and began firing at the position, but the visibility bad, owing to the whitish German drumfire was tense as in former days Somme front.

The British troops had session of the deep unrooms within the German. In this way, the officers I said, they celebrated the Emperor's birthday.

RUSSIANS MAKE GAINS

Teuton Lines Were Smashed on Roumanian Front.

Slav Armies After Weeks of Preparation Are Starting Offensives, and Although the Situation Has Been a Stalemate Since German Invasion of Roumania Was Stopped, Allies Look for Teuton Reverses.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—Russian forces after artillery preparation assumed the offensive Saturday against the Austro-German fortified positions on both sides of the Kimpolung-Jacobeni road, near the northwest frontier of Moldavia, and after stubborn fighting broke through the Teuton lines along a front of nearly two miles, says the official statement issued Sunday by the Russian War Department. Prisoners and booty were taken by the Russians, the extent of which has not yet been ascertained.

The Russian War Office report reads:

"Roumanian front: Our detachments after artillery preparation assumed the offensive on both sides of the Kimpolung-Jacobeni road, and after a stubborn fight broke through the enemy's fortified positions on a front of three versts. Prisoners and booty were taken, the extent of which is being ascertained."

"On account of superior Russian pressure directed against the Teuton lines in the Meste Caenece sector, on the Golden Bystritzia river front, in Roumania," says Sunday's German official statement, "the Austro-German forces Saturday were compelled to withdraw to positions nearer the east bank of the river."

The Roumanian War Office report said:

"In the Kasino valley our troops attacked the enemy, and, in spite of severe cold and heavy snow, succeeded after eleven hours of desperate fighting in driving him south of the Kasino and Suchitza valleys."

The Times' correspondent at Roumanian army headquarters telegraphs under date of January 24.

"I saw to-day one of the leading Roumanian generals, who stated: 'Behind this front, which is strongly established, the part of the Roumanian army which is not in the fighting front is working hard in reorganization work, which is done systematically. Were it not for the weather, which renders operations impossible, we could send to-morrow many thousands of fresh troops into the

VICTORY AT KUT-EL-AMARA.

Defeat of Turks by British May Prove Decisive.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—Evelyn Baring, first Earl of Cromer, former British agent and Consul-General in Egypt, died suddenly Monday evening. He had been ill for some time.

The late Earl was twice married, the second Countess and three sons surviving him. The heir to the Earldom is Viscount Errington, the eldest son.

The Earl of Cromer was born in 1841. He was appointed British agent and consul-general in Egypt in 1883, but resigned in 1907 owing to ill-health. It was said that Earl Cromer's sway in Egypt had been almost as absolute as that of an emperor. It was declared to have been a record of genius in administration in the minutest detail. Evelyn Baring in 1880 was made a financial member of the council of India at the age of 39, and by dint of successful work three years later was removed to Cairo. In bankrupt Egypt he did wonders in reducing taxation to a minimum, abolishing forced labor and placing the country on a paying basis. In 1892 he was raised to the peerage, and in 1901 was made an earl. One of the principal works of Earl Cromer in Egypt was the irrigation system, considered a model for the world.

Since the outbreak of the present war Earl Cromer has contributed numerous articles concerning important happenings. In July of last year he was appointed chairman of a commission to investigate the Dardanelles campaign.

EARL OF CROMER DEAD.

Will Be Remembered as Man Who Created New Egypt.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—A British official communication issued Monday evening concerning the fighting on the Mesopotamia front in Asiatic Turkey says:

"As the result of operations Saturday night and Sunday morning we are now in complete possession of Turkish first and second lines southwest of Kut-el-Amara, on the right bank of the Tigris, on a front of 4,300 yards. We also held the enemy's third and fourth lines on a frontage of 600 yards.

"Turkish dead to the number of 950 already have been counted and collected. More remain to be counted. Prisoners aggregating 127 were taken, together with one gun, a maxim, three trench mortars, and a quantity of other material."

Austrians Frozen to Death.

VIENNA, Jan. 30.—Heavy snows and intense cold have resulted in a slackening, and here and there a total cessation, of the military operations on all the war fronts where Austro-Hungarian troops are engaged. Blizzards prevail in East Galicia, Bukowina, the wooded Carpathians, and Roumania, the snow being several feet deep. The temperature is the lowest known in years, which is true also of the northern sectors of the Italian front and the Balkans.

ian army which is not in the fighting front is working hard in reorganization work, which is done systematically. Were it not for the weather, which renders operations impossible, we could send to-morrow many thousands of fresh troops into the fighting line. However, the next two months of enforced rest will be extensively utilized and our allies can count on in the next campaign a strongly-reorganized army, which this time will be well provided with all modern means of warfare. This will be valuable help to the great cause. Our soldiers are nearly all peasants, who cannot bear the idea of their villages in which they lived for centuries being in alien hands. All are determined to win them back or die.'

"The general situation on this front is a stalemate at present. All the enemy efforts of the last two weeks have been checked, with great losses by the Russo-Roumanian armies, which are holding a fixed front line."

Daring Murderer Caught.

WINDSOR, Jan. 30.—James Anderson, alias Steward, who shot and killed W. N. Jackson, a Winnipeg detective, on a train near here Thursday morning, was captured in Windsor Saturday.

Since the shooting the man has been hiding in a barn within a mile of the scene of the shooting. Having a craving for drugs, to which he is addicted, drove him from his hiding place shortly before daylight. He walked from this barn, the exact location of which has not yet been determined by the police, to Sandwick Street, and on to the Essex Hotel. He met a number of people but was not recognized. After registering as "James Edmundson" he went to the dining-room and afterwards to the bedroom assigned to him. County Councillor Lew Smith, of Leamington, saw the man in the hotel and immediately recognized him. He informed Inspector Mori Wigle, who despatched Detectives William Reid and William Broderick and Constable Ross to the scene. They entered his room and before Steward could reach for his revolver he was overpowered and handcuffed. He admitted the shooting, but said he did not intend to kill Inspector Jackson. "The gun had a hair trigger and it went off unexpectedly. I guess I would have shot anyone who tried to interfere with me after that," he said.

McNamara Gives In.

SAN QUENTIN, Cal., Jan. 30.—After spending 24 days in the dungeon of the state prison here, J. D. McNamara agreed to obey orders, and yesterday began to work in the jute mill. McNamara, who is serving a life term for his confessed part in the dynamiting of the Los Angeles Times building in 1910, had been working in the prison laundry, but his work was found unsatisfactory and he was ordered to the jute mill. On his refusal to go there he was placed in the dungeon. Every day he was taken out and asked if he were ready to obey orders, and until Saturday he regularly refused.

Paper for Canadians.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—A proposal is under consideration for the establishment of a daily newspaper in England for the benefit of Canadian soldiers both here and in France, and for the very large Canadian civilian element which has come in the train of the Canadian army.

"Turkish dead to the number of 950 already have been counted and collected. More remain to be counted. Prisoners aggregating 127 were taken, together with one gun, a Maxim, three trench mortars, and a quantity of other material."

The Turkish official statement for January 27:

"On the 24th the enemy heavily shelled our Fellahie front, but did not attack. South of the Tigris, British forces, after violent artillery fire, attacked on the 25th with strong forces and succeeded, with heaviest losses, in conquering some ground."

"Two thousand dead British were before our front on a small extension. On the 26th the enemy repeated the attack, being completely repulsed."

SALUTED ALLIED FLAGS.

Important Ceremony Was Held in Greek Capital.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The ceremony of saluting the Allies' flags by Greece was carried out Monday afternoon in the Zappeion in accordance with the arrangement recently entered into between the Greek Government and the Entente powers, says a Reuter despatch from Athens. The Allied Ministers, the commander of the first army corps, and the members of the Greek Cabinet were present. The general public was excluded from the building. No untoward incident occurred.

Gun Duels at Verdun.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—The communica- tion issued by the War Office Monday night reads:

"Artillery actions on both sides and grenade fighting occurred in the sector of Hill 304 on the left bank of the Meuse. Long-range artillery engagements took place in Lorraine. The usual cannonading occurred on the rest of the front."

"An enemy airplane was brought down by our artillery in the region of Dannemarie."

"Belgian communication — Par- ticularly lively artillery fighting took place in the course of the day in the sectors of Dixmude, Steenstraete and Heusas. In the direction of Ramscapelle and Noordschoote the artillery duel was less violent."

"Yesterday Leut. Gastin brought down within our lines a German airplane of the Albatross type. This is the fifth machine brought down by this pilot up to the present time. Last night our airplanes threw down projectiles on the railway stations at Athies, Savy, and Etrillers."

Will Fight to Finish.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—A few weeks after the publication of the German Government's peace proposal which suggested a conference of nations to discuss peace, the British military authorities in France sounded the enlisted men in the first line trenches to ascertain their views as to the desirability of peace along lines proposed by the Germans. The views of about 10,000 men were obtained unofficially, without the men being made aware that their replies were intended for record. When these replies were tabulated by the War Office, it was found that out of the 10,000 men only five were in favor of peace negotiations on the German terms.

The others favored a fight to a finish or a peace dictated by the Allies.

CURIOUS COINCIDENCE.

Story of a Lucky Stone and a Trio of Accidents.

George F. Kunz, the well known gem expert, relates this little story of a lucky stone and the adventures of its owners:

"Some years ago a meteorite was given to Edward Heron Allen, the famous writer on palmistry and the violin, and this gifted man always wore it about him. One morning he awakened to find that the entire roof above him had fallen in except just that portion over his bed."

"He told the story to one of the best known ladies in Boston, one who is known for her public spirit, her love of art and her faultless manner of entertaining. This lady successfully urged Allen to give her the meteorite.

"A few days later while out driving a great truck with two runaway horses attached to it struck her carriage. Instinctively she raised her muff to protect her face. The muff was almost cut in two, but the lady was not hurt. A few days later while she was walking under some scaffolding it fell, and the open part where the hoists went up proved to be just where she stood. Although surrounded by ruin, she remained unharmed."

Whether the stone was a factor in averting disaster to its owners in their moments of peril is, however, a matter apart from the facts in the case.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

HE KEPT THE TOOL.

And Prized It Because It Had Never Done Dirty Work.

"I was throwing up dirt from an excavation in the pavement one day," said an old laborer, "when a little old chap with white hair stopped to look on. I was as big as two of him. After a minute or two I rested on my shovel and looked up at him. Said I:

"If you had to do work with a shovel for your living you'd starve to death before you could make a trench deep enough to bury you in."

"I thought that was a smart thing to say, and I laughed. Then he answered me. He was a slow speaking man with a sort of drawl.

"I might—starve—as—you—say," he said, "and yet I—have—a—trade—in which I use—a—tool very much—like yours. In fact—many people—who—work at my trade—use—the—tool—to—shovel dirt and filth—with—as—you—do—with—yours. This—is—the—tool!"

"He handed me a steel pen.

"Is it a joke?" I asked.

"It—is—a—tool—to—make—them—with," he nodded. "That—is—part—of—my—trade. My name—is—Twain—Mark Twain."

"I have the pen yet," concluded the laborer, "and no dirt was ever shoveled with it."

STAGECOACH DAYS

Travel Often Spelled Misery Before We Had Railways.

TALE OF A WINTER JOURNEY.

Discomforts and Hardships That Had to Be Endured by the Passengers in an Old Style Trip Across the Allegheny Mountains in 1846.

How traveling is metamorphosed these days, to be sure! Yet some men "fond of handling the ribbons" and some women who "want to see the scenery at their leisure" still regret "the spanking bays and rocking stagecoach of the past."

Here is the way the Allegheny mountains were crossed in 1846:

"It was midwinter when we arrived at Wheeling, and as the stagecoach was to start at 5 o'clock in the morning no one thought of going to bed, so we took our way through the frozen streets to secure through tickets to Philadelphia. It was pitch dark and bitter cold—the damp, penetrating weather that reaches the very marrow of our bones.

"The little den, called by courtesy the office, was filled with passengers as damp, cold and ill natured as ourselves. There was a handful of coal burning in a small grate, and around it were grouped the round shouldered, unsympathetic people who were to be our fellow passengers. They glanced at us and closed up all the open space near the fire, as if to say: 'You don't get in here, we can tell you. You have no right to travel in our coach, any way!'

"At one side stood a table, and on it was a coffee pot and cups, some sausages frozen stiff and an unattractive loaf of bread, over which presided a tall darky, who leaned against the wall fast asleep. We were told that we could get a good breakfast twenty miles away from Wheeling.

"At the appointed time the heavy old coach came up, and we all clambered in and stowed ourselves away pell-mell. A short way from town there was a long hill, up which the horses toiled, so this gave us all time to settle down for a quiet nap. One snore after another announced their success; in a few minutes six out of the nine passengers were oblivious of their misery.

"Not being sleepy, I studied the snorers. A large fat man opposite me had a short, angry snore. He snored so loudly that he woke himself up and glared about him impudently, as though he hoped they wouldn't make that noise again!

"The old lady who was crushing me up in the corner snored deeply and contentedly.

"Some one off in a dark corner had a genial way of joining in as though he snored merely to oblige the passengers; but the grand musician of the company sat opposite me. I never heard anything approaching him either for quality or compass. It was a back

FORGETFUL LESCHETIZKY.

The Great Pianist Was One of the Most Absentminded of Men.

That famous pianist and still more famous teacher of music, Theodore Leschetizky, was one of the most absentminded of men.

One day, having experienced a slight symptom he thought he would visit his doctor and provide against a repetition. The day was cloudy, and he started forth umbrella in hand. Before reaching the nearest avenue it began to sprinkle, and he hailed a passing street car. Settled comfortably in a corner, he sank into meditation and was lost to material circumstances until the conductor announced: "End of route. Passengers will please descend."

Obediently the musician descended. He had passed the doctor's house long ago; besides, he had forgotten where he was going. A friend who happened to pass a few moments later, found him standing on the curbstone—his umbrella up, although it was no longer raining—glowering intently at the brimming gutter as he tried to remember his errand. Explanations followed, and the friend laughingly advised him to return home.

"Also, you will have my company all the way," he added genially. "That is to say, if you do not mind stopping a moment at Dr. So-and-so's, where I have promised to call for a prescription for my wife."

"Not at all; not at all!" cried Leschetizky, beaming. "My dear fellow, you have told me my destination. I, too, was going to Dr. So-and-so for a prescription."

The friends proceeded to the doctor's and obtained the two prescriptions. They left together, and on the top step—the sun was now shining brilliantly—the musician paused absentmindedly once more to put up his umbrella.

"But, my good friend, you do not need your umbrella," remonstrated his friend. "The rain ceased an hour ago."

At that moment the spring with which Leschetizky had been fumbling yielded, and the umbrella sprang open. His friend broke into a shout of laughter.

"True, the umbrella you have is more suitable to the weather than your own, but I am afraid the doctor's little daughter might not be satisfied with the exchange. I fear we must go back, Leschetizky, for there will be trouble."

Leschetizky lowered the supposed umbrella and looked at it. It was a blue parasol of diminutive size, much beruffled and gayly strewn with brocade pink roses.

"Yes," he agreed, "We must go back and exchange umbrellas. Besides, I must get my prescription. I put it into my purse, but I do not feel any purse in my pocket. I think I must have left it on the doctor's table."

"Leschetizky," inquired his friend, "are you quite sure you did not leave yourself behind in the car and that I am not walking with your twin?"—Youth's Companion.

AN OLD TIME TI

Lampreys Once a Fairly Dish In New England

PRIZED BY GENERAL

The Old Hero Even Refused to Give Up One of His Sixes to an Eel Hungry Their Former Fame Sung In

I was recently carried back boyhood days by a dinner of locally known in the olden time eels because of their resemblance to the true eel. Picture of the lamprey places it in the ranks of the fishes. Strict classification excludes them.

The lamprey is a vertebrate a bone. Its spine is but cartilage there are no other tissues that as hard as cartilage. It has mouth and seven gill openings side of the body back of the is the mouth and its peculiar are described in its scientific name Petromyzon marinus, meaning stone sucker. The color of lamprey (to distinguish it from lampreys of the rivers) mottled with black. Its length is about three feet.

In the early days of New England lampreys came up the Merrimack river by myriad thousands were caught by the settlers down for the year's supply of were salmon, shad and alewife came up from the ocean at time early summer and for purpose, the depositing of the in the fresh waters of the lakes. Most of the fish were with seines and dipnets.

The lampreys were caught in the shallower water of the fisherman waded in water was shallow and the current was invariable a rapid current lampreys darting for a short distance clinging by the sucking mouth while resting for another It was then that the men set and threw them to the shore helpers put them into receptacles.

Romance always has been linked with riding. In the playroom, mounted on a gallant rocking chair, youth rides into a land of golden deeds; later he swings in long gallops on the faithful hobby-horse into spicy and fugitive adventure. To the page on a prancing palfrey and to the cavalryman in khaki the lure of romance is the same. The rhythm of galloping hoofs thuds always in the imagination, the lady's favor on the lance and the quivering scarlet guidon flutter alike a mysterious and eternal challenge to the spirit of youth. "To horse and away," and all the world's before one.

Stevenson always wanted to write a story about a man galloping up to an inn at night, and the very suggestion brings a tingle to the imagination.

By on the highway, low and loud,
By at the gallop goes he.

He heard him in the sleepless midnights of his childhood, and, indeed, the sound of thudding hoofs always makes the heart beat faster. The sociable clattering of a single footer on asphalt, the crackling of twigs and leaves on the quiet autumn trails, the muffled rhythm of a canter on the turf, its resonance on a bridge—all these make music in the ears and bring the very smell of adventure. To him who rides there is always "something lost behind the ranges"—and his heart yearns for it.—Scribner's Magazine.

Made the Cannon Balls Fit.

The first battle of the war of 1812 was fought at Sackett's Harbor, July 9, 1812, and consisted of an attack made upon the village. The inhabitants had but one gun of sufficient size and strength to inflict damage, a thirty-two pounder, for which they had no shot. This difficulty was overcome by the patriotism of the housewives, who tore up carpets from the floors and with strips wound the small balls to fit the cannon.

The Orange In Spain.

It is considered a very healthful thing to eat an orange before breakfast. But who can eat an orange well? One must go to Spain to see that done. The señorita cuts off the rind with her silver knife; then, putting her fork into the peeled fruit, she detaches every morsel with her pearly teeth and continues to eat the orange without losing a drop of the juice and lays down the core with the fork still in it.

Eyes Out.

Two ladies were hurrying down the street in the rain, carrying their umbrellas low for protection. In turning a corner sharply the point of one umbrella struck a passerby in the forehead.

"Goodness!" gasped the woman. "I'll keep an eye out in the future."

"Begorra!" exclaimed the man. "Ye nearly had one out in the present!"—London Answers.

Chemical Misnomers.

"Copperas" is a conspicuous example of chemical misnomers, being sulphate of iron, not copper. Another is "salt of lemon," which has nothing whatever to do with the fruit of the lemon tree, but is potassium binoxalate or potash treated with oxalic acid.

gentle way of joining in as though he snored merely to oblige the passengers; but the grand musician of the company sat opposite me. I never heard anything approaching him either for quality or compass. It was a back action snore that began in a bold agitato movement, suddenly brought up with a jerk and ended with a whistle.

The whole band was in full play when we stopped with a tremendous jerk, and everybody woke up with oaths or "Pshaw!" over a bad jolt. The summit gained, there was a sharp crack of the whip, the horses started, and everybody was jerked violently backward. Soon the chorus began again, however, and I joined in till the coach came to a full stop at the table where the horses were to be changed.

"Stiff and sleepy and cramped from sitting so long in one position, the sun now rose and came in at all sorts of places, waking and blinding everybody. What a discontented lot we were! And we all hated each other!

"At last, breakfast—ah, hot coffee, ham and eggs and buckwheat cakes! The meal was not half over before we were a band of brothers. We could not do enough for each other. All was harmony and peace."

Nor was that all, for they drove into a severe mountain storm and intense cold, darkness: the horses fell on the icy roads; the stage rocked wildly in the wind and nearly blew over. Twenty-four hours of this, a driver frozen stiff and assisted down from the box. We do it now in six hours in a comfortable bed, in a warm, well lighted car. Some "modern imps" are mighty good angels.

Our chief loss has been the great cheerful, roaring open fires that people had in those days. The domestic virtues began to decay when people were reduced to sitting around a hole in the wall or a gloomy metal register, without armchairs, stories, songs, grandparents and little children roasting apples or popping corn—friends and strangers dropping in and getting a warm welcome, a place in the circle and what Spaniards call "the love of the fire."

Quite a Change.

Twenty-five years ago a young husband's wife went away for a two days' visit. When she returned he met her at the depot and embraced her and kissed her. The other day she returned from a two weeks' visit. He met her and said, while he took a chew of tobacco, "Well, did you have a good time?"

Never let your mirth, jubilation or pleasures dull your sympathy for the sorrow, suffering, sickness or indigence of other people.

It Was Too Exciting a Railroad Trip to Be Repeated.

An eastern man was riding by rail through the Rocky mountains. A friend had told him about riding on the pilot of the engine through some grand mountain scenery, and the easterner was eager to have the same experience. At the first opportunity, therefore, he asked the conductor whether his friends and he could ride on the front of the engine. The conductor very promptly said they could not. Nothing but a permit from the superintendent of the line would entitle any one to such a privilege. As the superintendent was a thousand miles away, it seemed a hopeless case.

The easterner spoke of his disappointment to the Pullman conductor, who told him that perhaps the affair could be managed after all. Through his diplomacy it was arranged somehow or other, and at the next station four of the party, including two ladies, took their places on the pilot.

The scenery was some of the grandest in the new world, but the easterner could not enjoy it. The two slender rails in front held his gaze with a sort of horrible spell. He could not look away from them. He felt almost the same sense of insecurity and terror that a man would feel if he were suddenly whirled off into infinite space.

Suddenly, as the train rounded a curve, he saw a hand car on the track ahead. His companions saw it at the same instant. A man stood beside it and was making desperate efforts to remove it from the rails. He got the wheels off; then, as the engine bore down upon him, he fled.

The engineer did not see the hand car at once, he was at the moment looking at his gauges. When he did see it was too late for him to check the speed of the train. He could only look on.

The hand car was on the side of the track nearest the man from the east. He had an awful half minute. He rose to his feet, not knowing what he did, and leaned far over in front of the others. His eyes were riveted upon the hand car. He saw nothing, realized nothing except its approach.

The engine struck the hand car with terrific force, and the pilot lifted it from the rails. It rolled up, ground against the very place where the easterner had been sitting, plowed a deep groove in the ironwork and then toppled over at the side of the track.

The frightened engineer set the brakes and brought the train to a standstill. Not one of the party was even touched, but they had had enough riding on the pilot. And, indeed, it was the end of such riding for others. From that time all such trips were strictly forbidden.

It was two years before the man from the east could see a hand car even standing harmlessly beside a railway track without turning faint and dizzy.—Youth's Companion.

There is another story that Stark, who had settled down farm after the Revolution, was a neighbor for the loan of "eels" for the winter. He replied that he couldn't spare him but sixteen barrels to till spring.

However much or little true may be in these stories, it is that lampreys formed an important part of the food of the settlers in Chester. In 1851 at the incorporation of the town a poem was read by Stark in which he thus referred to lampreys:

RUSSIA'S GREAT RAILWAY.

It Runs From Moscow to Vladivostok, a Distance of 6,000 Miles.

It was Alexander III. who first realized the possibility of making a railway across the whole length of the continent, and in the year 1892 his son, Czar Nicholas II., laid the first stone at Vladivostok. This was done in order to guard the newly acquired territories of the valleys of the Amur and Ussuri from the inroads of other nations; the railways would thus facilitate the transport of troops if necessary. It covers a distance of 6,000 miles from Moscow to Vladivostok. The Russian government voted £40,000,000 for its construction, and it was completed in eleven years.

It takes three days to reach Zlatoust, in the Ural mountains. There is to be seen the famous "stone of parting." Could it speak, what a number of heartrending tales it could tell. When criminals and political prisoners were sent to Siberia that "great lone land" of the east, their friends usually bade them goodby in the presence of the cold stone.

From Zlatoust the main line proceeds to Omsk, whence it reaches the shores of Lake Balkal, one of the largest fresh water lakes in the world. Sometimes the Russians term it "the holy sea," because an island in the lake was believed to be the abode of an evil spirit, who continually had to be appeased with sacrifices. Seals and beautiful sponges abound in the lake.

Previous to 1905 the whole train was transferred by means of a wonderful movable platform, where it rested on rails, on to the steamer on Lake Balkal. This steamer was built at Newcastle, and was fitted with powerful screws, which could be driven through ice four feet thick. Now the railway is continued round the south of Lake Balkal.—Pearson's Weekly.

GROWING PEANUTS.

How They Are Planted, Harvested and Prepared For Market.

The culture of the peanut is not attended with much difficulty. Land suited to the raising of corn or melons is generally selected, and care is taken that there is nothing in the soil that would stain the shells. Planting begins when the danger from frost has passed. The ground is plowed five or six inches deep and then harrowed. The nuts are taken from the pod without breaking their skins and are planted two or three together in rows about three feet apart and twenty inches from hill to hill, being covered with two inches of earth.

In October, when the nuts are ripe, the farmer loosens the earth and pulls up the vines, to which the nuts adhere, and turns them over to dry. He performs this task only in pleasant weather and when the ground is dry. When the vines have lain in the sun for a day, which is sufficient time for them to dry, the grower stacks them around a stake about five feet high.

The vines remain in stack from three to five weeks, after which the nuts are picked off, placed in sacks and shipped to market. A vine under favorable conditions often bears more than 100 nuts, and the yield per acre exceeds forty bushels.

brought about. I canceled that contract without a moment's hesitation." Thus did Mr. Schwab explain his action to me.

There was a sequel. Morgan later told Carnegie how magnanimously Schwab had acted. Carnegie remarked, "Charlie is the only man I know who would have done that."

And he promptly sent Schwab in bonds the full amount of the contract.

Carnegie declared publicly, "I owe my fortune chiefly to two men, Bill Jones and Charlie Schwab."

Schwab, let me add, for years picked all the Carnegie partners. Corey was a laborer when the eagle eyed Schwab first spotted and promoted him. The only man to whom the canny Scot ever gave carte blanche was Schwab.—B. C. Forbes in Leslie's Weekly.

Two War Songs.

Carlyle said that "Scots Wha Hae" was the finest war song ever penned by man. It was composed on horseback while Robert Burns was crossing a wild moor in a thunderstorm. But it has never become a real war song like the "Marseillaise," which has had power to fire the French to a white heat of patriotism for more than a century and which still retains its hold upon the nation.—London Answers.

Chinese Music.

The notes of Chinese music read, like the written characters, from right to left, and the intervals of the scale are different from those of the scale adopted by the nations of the west. The music is not very harmonious and sounds meaningless and jangling to western ears, but it has a pretty musical cadence that makes it attractive and interesting in spite of its frequent discords.

Lame Ducks.

"What is a 'lame duck,' anyhow?" asked the man from back home.

"A 'lame duck,'" responded Congressman Hammatt, "is a statesman who has been urged by his constituents to take his feet out of the trough."

More Soap and Less Water.

Because they use too much water and too little soap women do not get the same dazzling whiteness in their washed clothes as do the United States marines, a sergeant of the marine corps told a party of society women visiting a battleship.

"The eye-paining brilliancy of our white clothes is due to the fact that we wash with our heads as well as our hands, and we let soap do its proper share of the work.

"Just enough water to thoroughly wet the wash is sufficient," the sergeant continued, "and the less water and more soap one uses the whiter the washing will turn out."

The visitors seemed greatly impressed with the lesson given them in an art that is dear to every woman's heart.

Making Hominy a Lost Art.

AVERTED A TRAGEDY.

A Perilous Situation and the Way It Was Mastered.

There is a striking illustration in Das Buch fur Alle of the fact that it is not necessary to roam over the world to find adventure. The German merchant of the story found it in his own peaceful house in the quiet town of his birth. It happened on his daughter's wedding day, about sixty years ago. The happy father was alternately welcoming the guests and bustling about attending to final details.

In one of the halls he met a maid carelessly carrying a lighted candle without its holder. He did not rebuke her, as she was not one of the regular servants, but had only been brought in to help for the occasion. In a short time she returned from the cellar, her arms full of bottles, but with no candle. The absence of the light sent a sickening thought sweeping over the merchant. Only the day before several barrels of gunpowder had been stored in the cellar, and one of them had been opened in order to get a sample for a customer.

"Where is that candle?" he asked her quickly, with his heart in his mouth.

"I had my hands full and couldn't bring it up," the maid answered.

"Where did you leave it?"

"I stuck it in the black sand in the open barrel," she explained.

But the merchant had not waited to hear her out. Into the hall and down the cellar steps he stumbled. His knees were shaking, his breath caught in his throat; death already seemed to have its grip upon him.

Just beneath the room in which the guests were assembled stood the fatal barrel, the burning tallow candle upright in the powder. To his horror he saw a long piece of burned out wick sagging in the reddish flame. If that spark should fall! He made a desperate move toward the candle—and stopped. The slightest touch or breath might shake that glowing bit of wick into the powder. He heard the sound of laughter from above, and he trembled. He stared at the light, powerless to move.

Suddenly the end of the wick nodded, and with its movement the merchant recovered from his momentary paralysis. Cautiously he thrust both hands toward the candle; then, with a sudden squeeze, he smothered the wick and flame in his grasp. Never relaxing his hold, he carried the candle the length of the cellar; then he fainted.

WASTED TIME IN COURT.

How It Might Be Saved by Following the English System.

Professor Higgins tells how waste of time is avoided in English courts and suggests that the same practice ought to be adopted in American courts. It is done by "leading questions," of which the following is an example in an action for personal injuries, where the fact of the injury is admitted, but the negligent act denied:

"Your name is John Doe, living so and so. You are a painter by trade, and on May 1, 1914, you were on the Strand opposite the law courts and saw the accident when the plaintiff

A vine under favorable conditions often bears more than 100 nuts, and the yield per acre exceeds forty bushels.

To polish the peanuts and to remove the earth and stems the nuts are scoured in large metal cylinders, from which they pass through blast fans, in which a strong current of air separates the fully developed nuts having sound kernels from those imperfectly filled and from empty pods. The sound nuts fall through the fan upon sorting tables, where those that are discolored are taken out and the bright ones are passed on into sacks that will each hold about 100 pounds of nuts. Each sack is marked with the brand that indicates the grade of its contents.

TORE UP THE CONTRACT.

And It Called For a Salary of a Million Dollars a Year.

Only one man in the world ever tore up a $1,000,000 a year salary contract. When the Steel corporation took over the Carnegie company it acquired as one of its liabilities—it really was an asset—a contract to pay Charles M. Schwab that unheard of sum annually. J. P. Morgan didn't know what to do about it. The highest salary on record was $100,000. He was in a quandary.

Finally he summoned Schwab, showed him the contract and hesitatingly asked what could be done about it.

"This," said Schwab.
He tore it up.
That contract had netted Schwab $1,300,000 the previous year.

"I didn't care what salary they paid me. I was not animated by money motives. I believed in what I was trying to do, and I wanted to see it quoted by the Encyclopedia Britannica. It has spent several years and many postage stamps in a vain effort to discover somewhere in the United States a mill that can grind corn into the hominy that was known by our grandparents. Some think they have it, but it always turns out to be nothing but hulled corn or the so called hominy grits, neither of which would have made the classic "bowl of samp and milk" sung by Whittier.

She Was Right.

"How effusively sweet that Mrs. Blondie is to you, Jonesey," said Withersell. "What's up? Any tender little romance there?"

"No, indeed. Why, that woman hates me," said Jonesey.

"She doesn't show it," said Wetherell.

"No, but she knows that I know how old she is. We were both born on the same day," said Jonesey, "and she's afraid I'll tell somebody."

Feminine Perceptions.

"What shall I do at the meeting when I want to make a speech and some others try to head me off?"

"Why, get the chairman to recognize you."

"Oh, that is easy enough. I was introduced to her last week at Mrs. Pinkie's tea."

Silent Barbers.

Barbers in the early days of the Christian era were not permitted to talk while shaving a patron. Indeed, silence was so much appreciated by persons while under the barber's hands that mutes were preferred for this service.

"Like quills upon the fretful porcupine" does not always apply. Cuba has a quill-less porcupine.

"Your name is John Doe, living so and so. You are a painter by trade, and on May 1, 1914, you were on the Strand opposite the law courts and saw the accident when the plaintiff was run over by the defendant's bus, and you helped to pick the plaintiff up and carry him from the roadway?"

To which the witness answers "Yes."

Now, in an American court the testimony in that one question and answer would have been the subject of at least eight distinct questions and eight distinct answers, and in the hands of some lawyers this information would not have been elicited short of twenty questions, as: "State your name to the jury." "Where do you reside?" "What is your business?" "Where were you on May 1, 1914, at the hour of so and so?" "State what accident you saw there, if any?" "What did you do then?" And so on, and so on.

American courts are run in as leisurely manner as if there was nothing else on hand except the trial of the particular case at bar, whereas usually the court is weeks, often months, and sometimes a year behind in its docket.—Kansas City Star.

Ancient Abyssinia.

The Abyssinians are a race renowned for their courage and good looks. Of a deep brown in color, they are well formed and handsome, intelligent and fond of gaiety, too, but their needs are very simple, and they live in primitive fashion in rough circular stone huts thatched with grass. The history of Abyssinia dates very far back. Before Christ the country formed part of the ancient country of Ethiopia. The queen of Sheba was an Abyssinian queen, and the kings of Abyssinia claim descent from her.—London Spectator.

THE SOLDIER'S PRAYER BOOK

Years ago before trains were on rails soldiers had to march from place to place. On one occasion there was at Oxford City a battalion, and they were to march to Banbury, twenty-two miles away, on a Saturday, in very hot weather. Of course they expected a rest on the Sunnay, but the officers being rather inclined to be religious ordered them to church. During divine service an officer saw one man with a pack of cards under the pew, and at once sent for a Corporal to take him to the guard room.

On Monday he had to appear before the County Magistrates, and the officer told the bench what he was doing. They thought this was terrible conduct in God's house. But the soldier asked to be allowed to explain himself, and the bench granted his wish.

Well, said the soldier, when I look on the ace I think of our one God; when I look on the two I think of the Father and Son; when I look on the three, Father, Son and Holy Ghost; when I look on the four I think of the four great evangelists—Matthew, Mark Luke and John; when I look on the five I think of the five virgins. Well, there were ten, but five forgot to light their lamps.

When I think of the six it reminds me that in six days God made Heaven and Earth; when I think of the seven, the Lord rested the same as we were supposed to do when I got put in clink; when I look at the eight it reminds me of the terrible flood, when Noah, his wife, his three sons and their wives were saved from the terrible waters; when I look at the nine it reminds me of the nine lepers. True there were ten, but nine forgot to thank God for curing them; when I look at the ten it reminds me of Moses who brought the Ten Commandments from Mount Sinai to the Israelites; when I look at the Queen it reminds me of the Queen of Sheba who took fifty boys and fifty girls to King Solomon and asked him which were which, and he had to have them all stripped before he could tell; when I look at the King it reminds me of one King, the King of all, God Almighty.

Well, said the bench, are you finished, soldier?

No, Sir, when I count the cards I find there are fifty-two, which reminds me that there are fifty-two weeks in the year; when I count the suits I find there are four, which reminds me of the four seasons of the year; when I count the court cards there are twelve, which reminds me of the twelve months in the year; when I count the spots I find there are 365 which reminds me of the days in the year.

Very good, soldier, you are dismissed.

But, the officer said, he has left out the Knave!

What about the Jack, soldier?

Well, gentlemen, with all due respect to you and the officer who brought me here, he is the biggest Knave I have ever met.

But, said the officer, there are only 364 spots on the cards. Where is the other spot?

That one is for his Nob, the Knave, or one elsewhere.

BOUNDARY LINES.A Clearing 875 Miles Long Separates Alaska From Canada.

Boundaries between countries, states and counties and between cities and the country surrounding them are marked in various ways. Sometimes it is by a stone post or monument; often a county is separated from an adjoining county by a public road, which is surveyed purposely on the county line.

In some of the southern states counties which allow cattle to run at large are often separated from those which do not by a fence. The boundary between Alaska and Canada is marked by a clear strip in the woods 875 miles long.

When a highway passes from one country into another the traveler is made aware of the fact by the customs officials. Sometimes also, as in France, a tax is collected on country produce entering the cities. But in thinly settled sections of the United States the boundaries between counties and even between states are not always marked, and, though known to the inhabitants, are often not to be recognized by a stranger.

One notable instance of a marked boundary is the great wall of China, which extends for a distance of more than 1,500 miles along what was once the frontier of that empire.—Christian Herald.

FOUR POSTER BEDSTEADS.A Legacy From the Days When People Slept In Boxes.

In medieval times, when life was very insecure, it was usual for people to sleep on a bed which was surrounded by sides of boards with strong posts at the four corners. These sides contained sliding doors, which could be fastened inside.

When men retired to rest they took a weapon with them. If attacked in the night they were aroused by the noise made by the crashing in of their

When the law became strong enough to protect human life the sides of the bedstead were gradually dispensed with, but the four posts remained. The boxlike bedstead still survives in the rural parts of Scotland and is almost necessary where the earthen floors and imperfect ceilings cause much damp.
Emily Bronte in "Wuthering Heights" describes one of these bedsteads in the old mansions as forming a "little closet."
Mr. Lockwood, who had to sleep in it, says, "I slid back the panel sides, got in with my light, pulled them to-

Penalty of the Peach.

The Egyptians appear to have been acquainted with what is commonly called prussic acid, the most deadly of poisons. It is held that they distilled it from certain plants and trees, notably the peach. In the Louvre there is an ancient Egyptian papyrus from which the following has been deciphered:
"Pronounce not the name of I. A. O. under the penalty of the peach." This has been supposed to be a death warning to those who might be tempted to reveal mysteries in connection with the religious rites of the priests.

The Romans probably learned of prussic acid from the Egyptians. History has it that in the reign of Tiberius a Roman knight accused of treason drank poison and immediately fell dead at the feet of the senators, a significant circumstance, inasmuch as no other poison has the almost instantaneous effect of prussic acid.

LECTURE BY J. W. BENGOUGH

On Thursday evening, January 25th, the armories were filled to overflowing to hear the humorous and interesting lecture on "Equal Franchise," interspersed with pictures, given by J. W. Bengough, of Toronto. Mr. Bengough was no stranger to Napanee, having lectured here many times on other topics.

Mr. Bengough said he was going to begin with a quotation from a woman who is almost godly enough to be a saint. I wish to quote from her as she gets to the point. Dorothy Dix says, "that nothing but a lack of a sense of humor on the part of mankind in general has made possible the separation in the world of sex. Any judgment founded on the idea that a human being, whatever his character and ability, who happens to have been born male, is necessarily superior to another human being who happens to have been born female, is absurd." It is not the idea that the powers of

Gov. according to this, who are fit to answer them is absurd, but that the line that divides the fit class should be the sex line. Now this is certainly a grotesque opinion on their part. Still, in the likelihood of the 20th century, this is happening, and I am not quite sure whether it is not to a certain extent in Napanee. There possibly are people within the municipality who see nothing grotesque about the idea that the powers of Gov. should be confined to one sex.

Of course there must be a line marking off the limits of the franchise. It is right to answer that idiots, lunatics, criminals, etc., should be excluded, but it is neither right nor sensible to say nothing of the lack of politeness, that woman should be included with this class. Now the blunderer has it that we have adapted a perpendicular line in taxing these limits of the franchise instead of a horizontal line. Man and woman are not rivals or antagonists, but complements of each other, and the error has been to draw the Gov. line separating between political power and no political power as a perpendicular line separating the sex reserve of power to the male and depriving the female of all share in that power.

It would have been all right to have made that division if the Gov. were a male concern, but it is not a male concern, it is a human concern, and the only question is, "is woman a human being as much as man?" Woman is certainly a human being as much as a man, and is therefore entitled to all the rights and privileges which man enjoys. It ought to have been a horizontal line so as to include in the franchise all the power and judgment in the community. The line ought therefore to be horizontal passing just below the chin.

I am reminded here of the reply that Lloyd George made to a rude fellow at one of his meetings, who said something about his stature. "In Wales, the present premier of England said, we do not measure people from the chin down, we measure them from the chin up."

In the practical affairs of life, man has displayed a certain hogfish propensity and helped himself on account of his greater physical strength to all the powers of Gov. The absurdity of the idea of one sex Gov. has greatly

The best work of to-day can never be done by the one-armed, one-legged system of Gov. No man can make a home for himself without a woman. Just as no woman can make a real home for herself without man. Man has certainly made a mess of the job, and it is high time he took a partner. The opposition to-day is not man, it is stubbornness of custom and use and want, but it is coming. We are able to point to practical illustrations in Australia, New Zealand, in the United States and in our own Great West.

Blessings have been marked wherever some franchise has been given a trial. It has meant the introduction of an element largely good. It tends to increase the native vote as against the foreign vote. It also tends to increase the interest of men in all public affairs. It is recorded that there are a larger percentage of men vote where woman franchise prevails than where it does not. Spiritual ardor into statesmanship is what is sure to come into the world, and whether or not woman makes better use of her authority, she ought to have it all the same. It is simply putting woman's rights the equal of woman's privileges, because she is an equal human being. Not every anti-suffragist is a scalawag, but every scalawag is an anti-suffragist.

In this war the faithful services women have been able to render in a department of work entirely strange to them, we acknowledge her in all these respects. In coming forward to the enfranchisement of Canadian women in the midst of this insufferable war, I feel it is a legitimate patriotic work. Now we need the enfranchisement of our women as a terminative factor in helping to meet the problems that are passing and also coming. We must mobilize all our resources, and one of the greatest of these is the moral, intellectual and spiritual power that resides in Canadian womanhood. The war is not yet won, we are still in the lap of fate. Of course we will not permit ourselves to think of anything but victory for the Allies, but specially in the presence of a great many young men, some of them I am glad to see in khaki, I think it is time to realize what would be the condition in our country in the event of Germany triumphing in this war.

Closing, "God Save the King."

The Woman's Franchise Association wish to thank the boys in khaki for their efficient assistance in maintaining such perfect order throughout the evening. The good order spoke well for the lecturer.

Shark Stories.

A shark is very tenacious of life, and Dr. Gunther, the ichthyologist, pointed out in one of his contributions to the literature of his subject that "wounds affect fishes generally much less than higher vertebrates. A Greenland shark continues to feed while his head is pierced by a harpoon or by a knife as long as the nervous center is not touched."

A Norwegian antarctic explorer, H. J. Bull, gives a startling word picture of a shark's tenacity of life. This man-eater was caught at the Iceland cod-fishery. His liver, heart and internal arrangements were removed so as to put a period to his career, and the thus mutilated body was then cast into the sea. He simply gave a leisurely wag of his tail and swam rapidly out of sight.

STEALING ELEPHANTS

It Would Seem Difficult, Yet Regular Trade in Siam

It would seem that an elephant would be about the last thing a man would be able to buy in Siam. Yet in Siam one must keep watch on such elephants & own, no matter what they may be stolen from him.

Elephant stealing in Siam has always been more or less prevalent for some time past has been of much anxiety to the officials who were drawn up about years ago by the British authorities with a view to the prevention of this offense. Later supplemented by additional regulations, embodying definite rules for purchase and sale of elephants, imposing penalties on all possession of elephants who provided with sale papers presented before the local auth-

Notwithstanding all these regulations, elephant stealing continues, and in one year alone 100 elephants were stolen from I esters, representing a loss of $45,000.

The Karen tribesmen are offenders; but, though their inaccessible villages are unknown to the near kwen, or districts, in no single instance has any been rendered by the Siamese to the discovery of the thief. In Former Days Lawyers Were Forced to Shave

Nowhere was there more against beards than at the Court centuries ago. The Books of Lincoln's Inn in the tenth century are full of offenders who were "fined comens duryng such tym shall have any berde."

The war against bearded continued at the Inns of Court seventeenth century. Long however, the prejudice against shaved barrister remained. Vice Chancellor Bacon carried so far that he always listened to bearded or mustashed, pretending that he could not understand them. Even now, although plenty of bearded barristers few have attained eminence. The most brilliant exception is the late Judge Philip "silver tongued Benjamin," spite his mustache and beard, earned the principal has displayed a certain noggish propensity and helped himself on account of his greater physical strength to all the powers of Gov. The absurdity of the idea of one sex Gov. has greatly dawned on the world. It has progressed so far now that the once familiar character of the strong-minded female set forth as a type is no longer used.

But the leaders of to-day represent the highest type of cultured womanhood. Educated, cultivated, ornaments of universities, many of them are the leaders in Canada, England, and United States.

Our ideal is democracy, but that ideal has not been achieved, where there is not equal franchise, for democracy is based upon a Gov. of all competent citizens. A Gov. by the people, of the people, for the people, and not one-half in franchise and one-half not.

Mr. Bengough here drew a picture of Jack Canuck with one eye, one arm, and one leg, as one sex Gov. Jack Canuck only represents one-half the population of Canada, and that by no means the better half, and that is the justice that the women of this country have a right to demand, and when they have that demand acceded to, they would have done the best day's work for the Dominion of Canada that has ever been done yet.

The fact that woman's sphere is the home is not really a conclusive reason for her emancipation and possession of the franchise and the sign of her freedom. It is the fact that woman's sphere is the home that makes the enfranchisement desirable and necessary. The home is the foundation of the state, and is woman's sphere. It has been well said that the women of to-day are attempting not revolt or revolution but conservation of the home. The sphere that would represent women's work might be represented by health, fit clothing, food and education. Health is now largely under control of the Medical Health, clothing is manufactured, also food. Education is attended to in our schools. Now if women retain control of these they must follow their work out in the public domain, and in order to do this, she must be equipped with powers of citizenship. Therefore when we say "woman's sphere is the home," we are practically saying she must be so equipped. Being the home-maker and the director she cannot adequately perform her duties without the franchise, and if there is one class that needs the franchise, I think it is the married woman.

His Own Shame.

Robert's mother's admonishments to her small son generally ended with the words, "I'd be ashamed of you if you did so and so," and the word ashamed therefore was constantly in his ears.

One day after he had eaten up his little sister's candy his mother said to him:

"Robert, did you eat Dorothy's candy when I told you not to?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Robert in a tone of triumph, "and I'm just as ashamed of myself as I can be, so you needn't be ashamed of me at all."—New York Post.

Both Died as They Wished To.

Tennyson, who was a shy, reserved man, could never understand Robert Browning's love of society. He had been heard to remark that Browning would die in a white choker at a dinner party. The two poets died as they would have wished to die—Robert Browning in the grand Palazzo Ressoneco, with his son by his bedside, and Lord Tennyson in his beloved Surrey home, surrounded by his loved ones.

LINCOLN UNDER FIRE.A Salute That Might Have Carried Death In Its Train.

In "Reminiscences of a Wartime Statesman and Diplomat," by Frederic W. Seward, is the story of a visit to a French frigate, "I think the Garibaldi," on which the author accompanied Mr. Lincoln early in 1861. The visit over the party was leaving the frigate and the parting salute was about to be fired.

"As Mr. Lincoln took his seat in the stern he said: 'Suppose we row around her bows. I should like to look at her build and rig from that direction.' Captain Dahlgren, of course, shifted his helm accordingly. The French officers doubtless had not heard or understood the president's remark and supposed we were pulling off astern in the ordinary way.

"We had hardly reached her bow when on looking up I saw the officer of the deck pacing the bridge, watch in hand and counting off the seconds—'un, deux, trois'—and then immediately followed the flash and deafening roar of a cannon apparently just over our heads. Another followed, then another and another in rapid succession. We were enveloped in smoke and literally 'under fire' from the frigate's broadside. Captain Dahlgren sprang to his feet, his face afame with indignation as he shouted: 'Pull like the —, boys! Pull like —!'

"They obeyed with a will, and a few sturdy strokes took us out of danger. After he had resumed his seat and calmed down I said in a low voice, 'Of course those guns were not shotted, and we were below their range?'

"He answered, gritting his teeth, 'Yes, but to think of exposing the president to the danger of having his hand taken

LIBELED THE KING.

Then He Turned Informer and Won a Substantial Reward.

A colonel in the Prussian army, who had been discharged at the close of the Seven Years' war, importuned Frederick the Great to be reinstated. Weary of the incessant solicitations of his troublesome visitor, Frederick at length gave orders that he should never be admitted to his presence. Some weeks later a most bitter libel against his majesty appeared. Frederick seldom gave himself any concern about such attacks, but the present one exasperated him so much that he offered a reward of 50 friedrichs of gold for the discovery of the author. The day following the disgraced colonel demanded and obtained an audience.

"Sire," he began, on being admitted, "your majesty has just promised 50 friedrichs for the discovery of the author of a recent publication. I am come to claim that recompense. Behold in me the unfortunate libeler! My life I forfeit freely, but remember your royal pledge, and while you punish me, send to my poor wife and children the reward due to the informer."

The king, although struck with the sad extremity and self sacrifice of the officer, said sternly:

"Go instantly to the fortress of Spandau and there await my judgment!"

"I obey," said the culprit. "But the money?"

"Within two hours your wife shall receive it," said the king. "Take this letter and give it to the commandant, but he must not open it until after dinner."

The colonel arrived at Spandau and gave himself up as prisoner. At the prescribed moment the commandant opened the royal mandate. It ran:

To the bearer I give the command of Spandau. The present governor is to take the command of Berlin as a reward for past services.

Spiders and the Stars.

Spiders as an aid to astronomy are recognized to such an extent that certain species are cultivated solely for the fine threads they weave. No substitute for the spider's thread has yet been found for bisecting the screw of the micrometer used for determining the positions and motions of the stars. Not only because of the remarkable fineness of the thread are they valuable, but because of their durable qualities. The threads of certain spiders raised for astronomical purposes withstand changes in temperature, so that often in measuring sun spots they are uninjured when the heat is so great that the lenses of the micrometer eyepieces are cracked. These spider lines are only one-fifth to one-seventh of a thousandth of an inch in diameter, compared with which the threads of the silkworm are large and clumsy.

King shot a glance over his shoulder and then sat up in astonishment.

"Good Lord! Blithers! What the deuce can he be doing here? I say, Loraine! Hi!"

"Vantage in," cried his pretty wife, dashing a stray lock from her eyes.

Mr. King's astonishment was genuine. It might better have been pronounced bewilderment. Mr. Blithers was paying his first visit to Red Roof. Up to this minute it is doubtful if he ever had accorded it so much as a glance of interest in passing. He bowed to King occasionally at the station, but that was all.

But now his manner was exceedingly friendly as he advanced upon the group. One might have been pardoned for believing him to be a most intimate friend of the family and given to constantly dropping in at any and all hours of the day.

CHAPTER III.

Protecting the Blood.

THE game was promptly interrupted. It would not be far wrong to say that Mrs. King's pretty mouth was open not entirely as an aid to breathing. She couldn't believe her eyes as she slowly abandoned her court and came forward to meet their advancing visitor.

"Take my racket, dear," she said to one of the Feltons. It happened to be Fannie, and the poor child almost fainted with joy.

The prince remained in the far court, idly twirling his racket.

"Afternoon, King," said Mr. Blithers, doffing his panama—to fan a heated brow. "Been watching the game from the road for a spell. Out for a stroll. Couldn't resist running in for a minute. You play a beautiful game, Mrs. King. How do you do? Pretty hot work, though, isn't it?"

He was shaking hands with King and smiling genially upon the trim, panting figure of the prince's adversary.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Blithers," said King, still staring. "You—you know my wife?"

"How long is the prince to be with you, Mrs. King?"

"It's rather uncertain. Mr. Blithers," said she and no more.

Mr. Blithers fanned himself in patience for a moment or two. Then he looked at his watch.

"Getting along toward dinner time up our way," he ventured. Everybody seemed rather intent on the game which was extremely one-sided.

"Good work," shouted King as Fannie Felton managed to return an easy service.

Lieutenant Dank applauded vigorously. "Splendid!" he cried out. "Capitally placed!"

"They speak remarkably good English, don't they?" said Mr. Blithers in an audible aside to Mrs. King.

She smiled. "Officers in the Graustark army are required to speak English, French and German, Mr. Blithers."

"It's a good idea," said he. "Maud speaks French and Italian like a native. She was educated in Paris and Rome, you know. Fact is, she's lived abroad a great deal."

"Is she at home now, Mr. Blithers?"

"Depends on what you'd call home, Mrs. King. We've got so many I don't know just which is the real one. If you mean Blitherwood, yes, she's there. Course there's our town house in Madison avenue, the place at Newport, one at Nice and one at Pasadena, Cal., you know, and a little shack in London. By the way, my wife says you live quite near our place in New York."

"We live in Madison avenue, but it's a rather long street. Mr. Blithers. Just where is your house?" she inquired rather spitefully.

He looked astonished. "You surely must know where the Blithers house

"Pray do not think of it!" she cried. "The men change, of course, after they've been playing tennis, but we—we-well, you see, you haven't been playing," she concluded quite breathlessly.

At that instant the sprightly Feltons dashed pell-mell down the steps and across the lawn homeward, shrieking something unintelligible to Mrs. King as they passed.

"They are dears," said Mrs. King.

"The—er—prince attracted by either one of 'em?" he queried.

"He barely knows them, Mr. Blithers."

"I see. Shouldn't think they'd appeal to him. Rather light, I should say—I mean up here," and he tapped his forehead so that she wouldn't think that he referred to pounds and ounces. "I don't believe Maud knows 'em, as the little one said. Maud is rather"—

"It is possible they have mistaken some one else for your daughter," said she very gently.

"Impossible!" said he, with force.

"They are coming back here for dinner," she said, and her eyes sparkled with mischief. "I shall put you between them, Mr. Blithers. You will find that they are very bright, attractive girls."

"We'll see," said he succinctly.

King caught them up at the top of the steps. He seemed to be slightly out of breath.

"Make yourself at home, Mr. Blithers. I must get into something besides these duds I'm wearing," he said. "Would you like to—er—wash up while we're"—

"No, thanks," interposed Mr. Blithers. "I'm as clean as a whistle. Don't mind me, please. Run along and dress, both of you. I'll sit out here and—count the minutes," the last with a very elaborate bow to Mrs. King.

"Dinner's at half past 8," said she and disappeared. Mr. Blithers recalled his last glance at his watch and calculated that he would have at least fifty minutes to count, provided dinner was served promptly on the dot. So he settled himself in the big porch chair and scowled more deeply than before.

Later on he met the prince. Very warmly he shook the tall young man's hand—he even gave it a prophetic second squeeze—and said:

"I am happy to welcome you to the Catskills, prince."

"Thank you," said Prince Robin.

"A most extraordinary person," said Count Quinnox to King after Mr. Blithers had taken his departure, close upon the heels of the Feltons, who were being escorted home by the prince and Dank. The venerable Graustarkian's heroic face was a study. He had just concluded a confidential hour in a remote corner of the library with the millionaire while the younger people were engaged in a noisy though temperate encounter with the roulette wheel at the opposite end of the room. "I've never met any one like him, Mr. King." He mopped his brow and still looked a trifle dazed.

King laughed. "There isn't any one like him, count. He is the one and only Blithers."

"He is very rich?"

His face brightened. Low

"Good afternoon, Mr. Blithers," said King, still staring. "You—you know my wife?"

Mr. Blithers ignored what might have been regarded as an introduction and blandly announced that tennis wasn't a game for fat people, patting his somewhat aggressive extension in mock dolefulness as he spoke.

"You should see my daughter's play," he went on. "Got a medal at Lakewood last spring. I'll fix up a match soon, Mrs. King, between you and Maud. Ought to be worth going miles to see, eh, King?"

"Oh, I am afraid, Mr. Blithers, that I am not in your daughter's class," said Loraine King, much too innocently.

"We've got a pretty fair tennis court up at Blitherwood," said Mr. Blithers calmly. "I have a professional instructor up every week to play with Maud. She can trim most of the amateurs, so!"

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Blithers," mumbled King. "Permit me to introduce Count Quinnox and Lieutenant Dank." Both foreigners had arisen and were standing very erect and soldierly a few yards away. "You know Miss Felton, of course."

"Delighted to meet you, count," said Mr. Blithers, advancing with outstretched hand. He shook the hand of the lieutenant with a shade less energy. He affected a most degage manner, squinting carelessly at the prince.

"That young chap plays a nice game. Who is he?"

The two Graustarkians stiffened perceptibly and waited for King to make the revelation to his visitor.

"That's Prince Robin of—" he began, but Mr. Blithers cut him short with a genial wave of the hand.

"Of course," he exclaimed, as if annoyed by his own stupidity. "I did hear that you were entertaining a prince. Slipped my mind, however. Well, well, we're coming up in the world, eh, having a real nabob among us."

"Won't you sit down, Mr. Blithers?" said Mrs. King. "Or would you prefer a more comfortable chair on the porch? We—

"No, thanks, I'll stay here if you don't mind," said he hastily and dragged up the camp chair that Lieutenant Dank had been occupying.

"Fetch another chair, Luets," said King to the servant. "And another glass of lemonade for Miss Felton."

"Felton?" queried Mr. Blithers, sitting down very carefully on the rather fragile chair and hitching up his white flannel trousers at the knees to reveal a pair of purple socks, somewhat elementary in tone.

"We know your daughter, Mr. Blithers," said Little Miss Nellie eagerly. "I was just trying to remember"—

"We live across the road—over there in the little white house with the ivy"—"where I heard the name," proceeded Mr. Blithers, still looking at the prince. "By Jove, I should think my daughter and the prince would make a rattling good match. I mean," he added, with a boisterous laugh, "a good match at tennis. We'll have to get 'em together some day, eh, up at Blitherwood. How long is the prince to be with you, Mrs. King?"

where is your house?" she inquired rather spitefully.

He looked astonished. "You surely must know where the Blithers house is!"

"Game!" shrieked Fannie Felton, tossing her racket in the air, a victor.

"They're through," said Mr. Blithers in a tone of relief. He shifted his legs and put his hands on his knees, suggesting a readiness to arise on an instant's notice.

"Shall we try another set?" called out the prince.

"Make it doubles," put in Lieutenant Dank, and turned to Nellie. "Shall we take them on?"

And doubles it was, much to the disgust of Mr. Blithers. He sat through the nine games, manifesting an interest he was far from feeling.

To his utter amazement at the conclusion of the game the four players made a dash for the house without even so much as a glance in his direction. It was the prince who shouted something that sounded like "now for a shower!" as he raced up the terrace, followed by the other participants.

Mr. Blithers said something violent under his breath, but resolutely retained his seat. It was King who glanced shyly at his watch this time and subsequently shot a questioning look at his wife. She was frowning in considerable perplexity and biting her firm, red lips. Count Quinnox coolly arose and excused himself with the remark that he was off to dress for dinner. He also looked at his watch, which certainly was an act that one would hardly have expected of a diplomat.

"Well, well," said Mr. Blithers profoundly. Then he looked at his own watch—and settled back in his chair, a somewhat dogged compression about his jaws. He was not the man to be thwarted. "You certainly have a cozy little place here, King," he remarked after a moment or two.

"We like it," said King, twiddling his fingers behind his back. "Humble, but homely."

"Mrs. Blithers has been planning to come over for some time, Mrs. King. I told her she oughtn't to put it off—be neighborly, don't you know. That's me. I'm for being neighborly with my neighbors. But women, they—well, you know how it is, Mrs. King. Always something turning up to keep 'em from doing the things they want to do most. And Mrs. Blithers has so many sociable obli—I beg pardon?"

"I was just wondering if you would stay and have dinner with us, Mr. Blithers," said she, utterly helpless. She couldn't look her husband in the eye—and it was quite fortunate that she was unable to do so, for it would have resulted in a laughing duet that could never have been explained.

"Why," said Mr. Blithers, arising and looking at his watch again, "bless my soul, it is past dinner time, isn't it? I had no idea it was so late. 'Pon my soul, it's good of you, Mrs. King! You see, we have dinner at 7 up at Blitherwood, and—I declare, it's half past now! I don't see where the time has gone. Thanks! I will stay if you really mean to be kind to a poor old beggar. Don't do anything extra on my account, though—just your regular dinner, you know. No frills, if you please." He looked himself over in some uncertainty. "Will this rag of mine do?"

King laughed. "There isn't any one like him, count. He is the one and only Blithers."

"He is very rich?"

"Millions and millions," said Mrs. King. "Didn't he tell you how many?"

"I am not quite sure. This daughter of his—is she attractive?"

"Rather. Why?"

"He informed me that her dot would be twenty millions if she married the right man. Moreover, she is his only heir. 'Pon my soul, Mrs. King, he quite took my breath away when he announced that he knew all about our predicament in relation to the Russian loan. It really sounded quite—you might say significant. Does—does he imagine that—good heaven, it is almost stupefying!"

"Sounds ominous to me," said King dryly. "Is Bobby for sale?"

The count favored him with a look of horror. "My dear Mr. King!" Then as comprehension came, he smiled. "I see. No, he isn't for sale. He is a prince, not a pawn. Mr. Blithers may be willing to buy, but—" He proudly shook his head.

"He was feeling you out, however," said King, ruminating. "Planting the seed, so to speak."

The count seemed to be turning something over in his mind. "Your amazing Mr. Blithers further confided to me that he might be willing to take care of the Russian obligation for us if no one else turns up in time. As a matter of fact, without waiting for my reply, he said that he would have his lawyers look into the matter of security at once. Amazing, amazing!"

"Of course you told him it was not to be considered," said King sharply.

"I endeavored to do so, but I fear he did not grasp what I was saying. Moreover, I tried to tell him that it was a matter I was not at liberty to discuss. He didn't hear that, either."

"He is not in the habit of hearing any one but himself, I fear," said King.

"I am afraid poor Robin is in jeopardy," said his wife ruefully. "The boy man is after him."

CHAPTER IV.

The Loan Is Blocked.

M R. BLITHERS reached home in high spirits. His wife was asleep, but he awoke her without ceremony.

"I say, Lou, wake up! Got some news for you. We'll have a prince in the family before you can say Jack Robinson."

She sat up in bed, blinking with dismay. "In heaven's name, Will, what have you been doing? What have you been!"

"Cutting bait," said he jovially. "In a day or two I'll throw the hook in and you'll see what I land. He's as good as caught right now, but we'll let him nibble awhile before we jerk. And, say, he's a corker, Lou. Finest young fellow I've seen in many a day. He!"

"You don't mean to say that you—you actually said anything to him about—about—oh, my God, Will, don't tell me that you were crazy enough to—" cried the poor woman, almost in tears.

"How could he possibly be of assistance to us?" the count inquired.

"He happens to be a director in both concerns, besides being such a power in the financial world that his word is almost law when it comes to the big deals."

All the way down to the city Count Quinnox was thoughtful, even preoccupied. They were nearing the terminal when he leaned over and, laying his hand on King's knee, said after a long interval of silence between them:

"I suppose you know that Graustark has not given up hope that Prince Robin may soon espouse the daughter of our neighbor, Dawsbergen."

King gave him a queer look. "By Jove, that's odd! I was thinking of that very thing when you spoke."

"The union would be of no profit to us in a pecuniary way, my friend," explained the count. "Still it is most desirable for other reasons. Dawsbergen is not a rich country, nor are its people progressive. The reigning house, however, is an old one and rich in traditions. Money, my dear King, is not everything in this world. There are some things it cannot buy. It is singularly ineffective when opposed to an honest sentiment. Even though the young princess were to come to Graustark without a farthing she would still be hailed with the wildest acclaim. We are a race of blood worshipers, if I may put it in that way. She represents a force that has dominated our instincts for a great many centuries, and we are bound hand and foot, heart and soul, by the so called fetters of imperialism. We are fierce men, but we bend the knee and we wear the yoke because the sword of destiny is in the hand that drives us. Today we are ruled by a prince whose sire was not of the royal blood. Our prince assumes an attitude of independence that we find difficult to overcome. He is prepared to defy an old precedent in support of a new one. In other words, he points out the unmistakably happy union of his own mother, the late Princess Yetive, and the American Lorry, and it is something we cannot go behind. He declares that his mother set an example that he may emulate without prejudice to his country if he is allowed a free hand in choosing his mate."

After the people of Graustark cannot let go with complaisance on the possible result of his search for a sharer of the throne. Traditions must be upheld—or we die. True, the crown princess of Dawsbergen has American blood in her veins, but her sire is a prince royal. Her mother, as you know, was an American girl. She who sits on the throne with Robin must be a princess by birth or the grip on the sword of destiny is weakened and the dynasty falters."

They had not been in New York city an hour before they discovered that William W. Blithers was the man to whom they would have to appeal if they expected to gain a fresh hearing with the banks. The agents were in a dismal state of mind. The deal had been blocked no later than the afternoon of the day before and at a time when everything appeared to be going along most swimmingly. Blithers was the man to see. He and he alone could bring pressure to bear on the directorates that might result in a reconsideration.

And with that the count got up and stalked out of the office, putting on his hat as he did so.

"Count," said King as they descended in the elevator. "I've got an idea in my head that Blithers will be at the Ritz at 4."

"Do you imagine, sir, that I will receive him?"

"Certainly. Are you not a diplomat?" asked King.

"I am a minister of war," said the count, and his scowl was an indication of absolute proficiency in the science.

"And, what's more," went on King reflectively, "it wouldn't in the least surprise me if Blithers is the man behind the directors in this sudden move of the banks."

"My dear King, he displayed the keenest interest and sympathy the other night at your house. He"— when everything appeared to be going along most swimmingly. Blithers was the man to see. He and he alone could bring pressure to bear on the directorates that might result in a reconsideration of the surprising verdict. Something had happened during the day to alter the friendly attitude of the banks. They were now politely reluctant, as one of the agents expressed it, which really meant that opposition to the loan had appeared from some unexpected source as a sort of eleventh hour obstacle. The heads of the two banks had as much as said that negotiations were at an end, that was the long and short of it. It really didn't matter what was back of their sudden change of front, the fact still remained that the transaction was as "dead as a door nail" unless it could be revived by the magnetic touch of a man like Blithers.

"What can have happened to cause them to change their minds so abruptly?" cried the perplexed count. "Surely our prime minister and the cabinet have left nothing undone to convince them of Graustark's integrity and"—

"Pardon me, count," interrupted one of the brokers. "Shall I try to make an appointment for you with Mr. Blithers? I hear he is in town for a few days."

Count Quinnox looked to Truxton King for inspiration, and that gentleman favored him with a singularly dispiriting nod of the head. The old Graustarkian cleared his throat and rather stiffly announced that he would receive Mr. Blithers if he would call on him at the Ritz that afternoon.

"What!" exclaimed both agents, half starting from their chairs in amazement.

The count stared hard at them. "You may say to him that I will be in at 4."

"He'll tell you to go to—abem!" The speaker coughed just in time. "Blithers isn't in the habit of going out of his way to—oblige anybody. He wouldn't do it for the emperor of Germany."

"But," said the count, with a frosty smile, "I am not the emperor of Germany."

"Better let me make an appointment for you to see him at his office. It's just around the corner." There was a pleading note in the speaker's voice.

"You might save your face, Calvert, by saying that the count will be pleased to have him take tea with him at the Ritz," suggested King.

"Tea!" exclaimed Calvert scornfully. "Blithers doesn't drink the stuff."

"It's a figure of speech," said King patiently.

"All right; I'll telephone," said the other dubiously.

He came back a few minutes later with a triumphant look in his eye.

"Blithers says to tell Count Quinnox he'll see him tomorrow morning at half past 8 at his office. Sorry he's engaged this afternoon."

"But did you say I wanted him to have tea with us?" demanded the count, an angry flush leaping to his cheek.

"I did. I'm merely repeating what he said in reply. Half past 8, at his office, count. Those were his words."

"It is the most brazen exhibition of insolence I've ever!" began the count furiously, but checked himself with an effort. "I—I hope you did not say that I would come, sir!"

"Yes; it's the only way!"

"Of course I may be wrong," admitted King, but his brow was clouded.

Shortly after luncheon that day Mrs. Blithers received a telegram from her husband. It merely stated that he was going up to have tea with the count at 4 o'clock and not to worry, as things were shaping themselves nicely.

CHAPTER V.

Prince Robin Is Asked to Stand Up.

LATE the same evening Prince Robin, at Red Roof, received a long distance telephone communication from New York city. The count was on the wire. He imparted the rather startling news that William W. Blithers had volunteered to take care of the loan out of his own private means.

Robin was jubilant. The thought had not entered his mind that there could be anything sinister in this amazing proposition of the great financier.

If Count Quinnox himself suspected Mr. Blithers of an ulterior motive the suspicion was rendered doubtful by the evidence of sincerity on the part of the capitalist, who professed no sentiment in the matter, but insisted on the most complete indemnification by the Graustark government. Even King was impressed by the absolute fairness of the proposition. Mr. Blithers demanded no more than the banks were asking in the shape of indemnity—a first lien mortgage for twelve years on all properties owned and controlled by the government and the deposit of all bonds held by the people with the understanding that the interest would be paid to them regularly, less a small per cent as commission. His protection would be complete, for the people of Graustark owned fully four-fifths of the bonds issued by the government for the construction of public service institutions. These by consent of Mr. Blithers were to be limited to three utilities—railroads, telegraph and canals. These properties, as Mr. Blithers was by way of knowing, were absolutely sound and self supporting.

Robin inquired whether he was to come to New York at once in relation to the matter and was informed that it would not be necessary at present. Mr. Blithers, however, would give himself the pleasure of calling upon the prince at Red Roof later in the week, when the situation could be discussed over a dish of tea or a cup of lemonade. That is precisely the way Mr. Blithers put it.

The next afternoon Mrs. Blithers left cards at Red Roof—or, rather, the footman left them—and on the day following the Kings and their guests received invitations to a ball at Blithewood on the ensuing Friday, but four days off. While Mrs. King and the two young men were discussing the invitation the former was called to the telephone. Mrs. Blithers herself was speaking.

"I hope you will pardon me for calling you up, Mrs. King, but I wanted to be sure that you can come on the 17th. We want so much to have the prince and his friends with us. Mr. Blithers has taken a great fancy to Prince Robin and Count Quinnox, and he declares the whole affair will be a fiasco if they are not to be here."

"It is good of you to ask us, Mrs. Blithers. The prince is planning to leave for Washington and I fear!"

"Oh, you must prevail upon him to remain over, my dear Mrs. King. We are to have a lot of people up from

"Well, perhaps Maud and I may run in and see you for a few minutes tomorrow or next day, just to talk things over a little—what's that, Maud? I beg your pardon, Mrs. King. Ahem! Well, I'll call you up tomorrow, if you don't mind being bothered about a silly old ball. Goodby."

Mrs. King confronted Robin in the lower hall a few seconds later and roundly berated him for shouting up the steps that Hobbs ought to be invited to the ball. Prince Robin rolled on a couch and roared with delight. Lieutenant Dank, as became an officer of the Royal guard, stood at attention—in the bow window with his back to the room, very red about the ears and rigid to the bursting point.

"I suppose, however, we'll have to keep on the good side of the Blithers syndicate," said Robin soberly, after his mirth had subsided before her wrath. "Good Lord, Aunt Loraine, I simply cannot go up there and stand in line like a freak in a side show for all the ladies and girls to gape at. I'll get sick the day of the party, that's what I'll do, and you can tell 'em how desolated I am over my misfortune."

"They've got their eyes on you, Bobby," she said flatly. "You can't escape so easily as all that. If you're not very, very careful they'll have you married to the charming Miss Maud before you can say Jack Rabbit."

"Think so? Is she good looking?"

"Well, I would consider her to be a very good looking girl."

"Blonde?"

"Mixed. Light brown hair and very dark eyes and lashes. A little taller than I, more graceful and a splendid horsewoman. I've seen her riding."

"Astride?"

"No, I've seen her in a ball gown too. Most men think she's stunning."

"Well, let's have a game of billiards," said he, dismissing Maud in a way that would have caused the proud Mr. Blithers to reel with indignation.

A little later on, at the billiard table, Mrs. King remarked, apropos of nothing and quite out of a clear sky, so to speak:

"And she'll do anything her parents command her to do; that's the worst of it. If they order her to marry a title she'll do it. That's the way she's been brought up, I'm afraid."

The next day Count Quinnox and King returned from the city, coming up in a private car with Mr. Blithers himself.

"I'll have Maud drive me over this afternoon," said Mr. Blithers as they parted at the station.

But Maud did not drive him over that afternoon. The pride, joy and hope of the Blithers family flatly refused to be a party to any such arrangement and set out for a horseback ride in a direction that took her as far away from Red Roof as possible.

"What's come over the girl?" demanded Mr. Blithers, completely nonplussed. "She's never acted like this before, Lou."

GROWING OF SORGHUMS.

Contrary to Common Belief, They Leave No Toxic Substances in the Soil.

That the growing of sorghums, contrary to common belief, leaves no poisonous or toxic substances in the soil is the belief of R. I. Throckmorton, associate professor of agronomy in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"In the past," said Mr. Throckmorton, "it has been generally believed that the growing of sorghums, especially Kafir, left poisonous or toxic substances in the soil, which were injurious to following crops. Recent experiments, however, have failed to show the presence of any such substances."

"It is now thought that the particular manner of growth of these offending sorghums is the cause of the injury to the succeeding crops. The sorghums, which include the Kafirs, are planted, as a rule, in June as a forage crop. Thus they make their growth during the summer and early fall. This usually is the driest part of the year. The sorghum will withstand a protracted drought, starting a vigorous growth as soon as the moisture comes, whereas the ordinary plant would be so weakened that it would take only a small amount of moisture if any at all. If there is but little moisture present the plant is so constituted that it will make a limited growth and live. If, on the other hand, a large amount of moisture is present the plant is capable of using large quantities. The root system is large and fibrous, fitting the plant for taking large quantities of moisture from the soil."

While sorghums do not use more plant food and moisture in their growth than corn, they take it at a time of year when little more can be made available before the return of warm weather and spring rains.

With these facts in mind it would not be advisable to follow sorghums with a fall crop such as wheat. Some relatively late planted crop had best be chosen to follow sorghum. Corn or some other intertilled crop that is not planted too early would be best. This allows for spring rains, warmth and sunshine to get in their work before the new crop needs the plant food and moisture. If some method is pursued such as the one cited there should be little ill effect because of the preceding sorghum crop.

SHEEP ON SMALL FARMS.

They Cost Little and Give Good Value In Various Ways.

Dr. R. H. Williams, animal husbandman, University of Arizona agricultural experiment station, believes that every farmer should keep a small flock of sheep. They cost little for feed, for they act as weed scavengers and grow into marketable products at an early age. Small flocks upon every irrigated farm will become more popular, for it is on such farms that maximum results may be obtained in the projects. There are also many waste places on farms which may be utilized for sheep production. Another advantage of sheep is that they require little labor. They come as near solving the "hired help problem" as any other kind of mixed farming. Lambs milk the ewes

SUFFERED FROM BACKACHE RHEUMATISM, DROPSY.

Dear Mr. Editor—I wish to tell you of a recent experience I had when suffering from backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, and congestion of the kidneys. I tried a new medicine called "Anuric," which has recently been discovered by Dr. Pierce, of whose medicines and Surgical Institution in Buffalo, N. Y., you have no doubt heard for years. This medicine acted upon me in a wonderful manner. I never have taken any medicine so helpful in such quick time. I do wish anyone in need of such a remedy would give it a trial. (Signed) G. H. HERR.

NOTE: Folks in town and adjoining counties are delighted with the results they have obtained by using "ANURIC," the newest discovery of Dr. Pierce, who is head of the INVALIDS' HOTEL and SURGICAL INSTITUTE, in Buffalo, N. Y. Those who started the day with a backache, stiff legs, arms and muscles, and an aching head (worn out before the day began because they were in and out of bed half a dozen times at night) are appreciating the perfect rest, comfort and new strength they obtained from Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets. To prove that this is a certain uric acid solvent and conquers headache, kidney and bladder diseases and rheumatism, if you've never used the "Anuric," cut this out and send ten cents to Doctor Pierce for a large sample package. This will prove to you that "Anuric" is thirty-seven times more active than lithia in eliminating uric acid—and the most perfect kidney and bladder corrector. If you are a sufferer, go to your best druggist and ask for a 50-cent box of "Anuric." You run no risk for Dr. Pierce's good name stands behind this wonderful new discovery as it has for the past half century for his "Golden Medical Discovery" which makes the blood pure, his "Favorite Prescription" for weak women and "Pleasant Pellets" for liver ills.

NITROGEN IN SOILS.

Painstaking studies in Colorado to find out what becomes of the nitrogen in the soils in view of its being an atmospheric element and subject to a wide bacterial and chemical activity have resulted in conclusions to the effect that it cannot be accounted for by removal through crops grown, and no correlation could be established between the nitrate content and the total nitrogen. The greatest loss of nitrogen in a season was shown from the land treated with manure and nitrogenous fertilizers, but when phosphatic fertilizers were used the development of nitrate showed over the total nitrogen present. However, the limed land showed a gain in total nitrogen. There was practically no nitrifying activity in the second foot of the soil.

SMUT OF SEED GRAINS.

The Treatment Is Neither Difficult Nor Expensive.

The treatment of seed grains in order to prevent smut has become a recognized farm practice, says the Farm Progress. It pays whether the formalin or other treatment is used. The treatments for smut are neither difficult nor expensive.

The formalin may be got at any drug store at a cost of from 75 cents to 90 cents per pound or cheaper when bought in quantities. One pound is sufficient for forty-five to sixty bushels of grain. It should be used at the rate of one ounce to three gallons of water, and as a rule one gallon of the mixture is sufficient to treat one bushel of grain.

The seed wheat may be treated by spreading the grain in thin layers on a smooth floor, canvas or on the hard ground and sprinkling with diluted formalin, so as to thoroughly wet the grain with the mixture. Then shovel the grain thoroughly for a few times to insure an even distribution of the solution.

The wheat should then be covered with bags or blankets to keep the fumes of the formalin within. It should stand in this way for from six to twelve hours and should then be dried thoroughly by spreading out in thin layers and stirring frequently. The seed is then ready for sowing. Be sure that the wheat is not put in bags that are infested with smut when carrying

THICK SEEDING OF GRAIN

It has been often claimed that thick seeding of grain is a disadvantage in seed production. This is contradicted by careful conducted experiments, and it has been shown that one and a quarter bushels of seed drilled against one and a half bushels to the acre gave a whole crop equal to that sown at a per cent profit on the seed.

CARING FOR IMPLEMENTS

Shed Not Necessary For Protection if Precautions Are Taken.

An implement shed is not a necessity in the winter protection of machinery if proper precautions are taken, asserts F. A. Wirt, professor in charge of the department of farm machinery in the Kans as agricultural college. "Frequently the farmer does not go to the expense of erecting a shed for storing machinery," said "In fact, he may often spend more money to better advantage in the purchase of more stock, better seed and better equipment. The need of this expenditure may be avoided to a great extent if the machinery is properly treated before it is put into the fall.

"When through using the greases remove the canvases them. Grease the eye of the axle but never use oil for this purpose, as the grease stays on longer and is more likely to wash off. Almost any axle grease will do. This applies to the use of grease on parts of all farm machinery, teams and parts of plow bottoms, particularly well greased.

"Remove the sickle from the scythe and the shovels from the pitchfork. The frame of these implements should be removed, but to prevent the loss of these parts they should be painted with a coat of red lead or paint.

"Before painting farm machinery the grease should be removed and water, and if necessary should be scraped. Rust can be removed by the use of a wire brush and a subsequent rubbing of the surface with a piece of brick.

"The use of poor machinery increases the cost of production because of the fact that it takes longer to do work with a poor tool than with an efficient one. Time is often lost because of the necessity of repairing parts at an inopportune time due to machinery being broken down after properly being repaired. This is a waste of mechanical energy and means a loss of crops, which is more important than the depreciation of the machine."

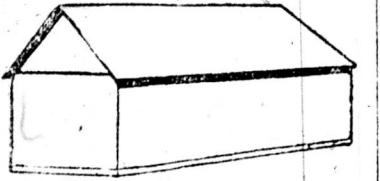

A Turnip Toper.

Here is a simple and easy way to remove the tops from turnips. We used one last fall and saved time, which every farmer thinks of value, says a correspondent of Farm Progress.

They come as near solving the "hired help problem" as any other kind of mixed farming. Lambs milk the ewes at somewhat regular intervals, and they separate the milk and store away the product without the use of cans or refrigeration. When a farmer sees a bulge on his side of the market the kind hearted and industrious lambs are asked to trot to market, carrying all the milk and worry with them. It is like finding money, for the sheep have paid their way in wool, fertilizer and in the destruction of weeds.

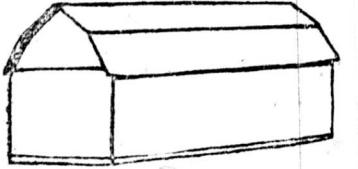

Barn Roofs.

A great deal of the value of a barn of any type depends upon the space it offers for storing feeds and forage, particularly the bulkier kinds like hay and fodder. Even where the hay or fodder is baled it is usually necessary to store as much as possible of it in the barns, where it will be handy for feeding.

The ordinary gable roof will not offer as much space as the gambrel roof. The gambrel roof will cost a little more to construct, but it will greatly increase the haymow's storage space.

This increase is secured without increasing the height of the roof at the plate or at the ridge. In a barn that is any size the increased storage for hay made by this method will be considerable. A little study of the two roofs will show just where the increased storage capacity comes.

Musical Bruises.

"That's a peculiar looking bruise you have on the back of your neck," observed the doctor.

"Yes," said the patient. "I am subject to those. You see, I'm a clarinet player in an orchestra."

"I don't see how that can produce bruises on the back of your neck."

"It doesn't produce them exactly, but it places me in position where I am very liable to get them."

"How is that?"

"I sit directly in front of the man who plays the slide trombone."

The Soft Answer.

A certain politician seeking office was very much incensed at certain remarks which had been made about him by the leading paper of the town. He burst into the editorial room like a dynamite bomb and exclaimed:

"You are telling lies about me in your paper, and you know it!"

"You have no cause for complaint," said the editor coolly. "What in the world would you do if we told the truth about you?"—New York Globe.

Important In Its Way as Housecleaning In the Spring.

Garden cleaning in the fall is as important in its way as housecleaning in the spring, whether flowers or vegetables make up the garden plot. The achievement of garden cleanliness at this season will often do much toward insuring healthiness and thriftiness of plants during the next growing season. The foliage and branches of plants which have been attacked by disease or badly infested by insect pests should be cleaned up especially well and burned.

If it is possible or desirable to clean away plants from some portions of the garden before frost such areas may well be sown to rye as a cover crop, the growth to be turned under in early spring. Incidentally, too, the patches of green will give the otherwise bare garden a cleanly and more cheerful appearance during the winter.

It is after frost that cleaning is most needed in the garden. When annual plants have been nipped those that may harbor disease or insect pests should be cut down or dug up and burned. If the soft leaved plants which will rot easily are free from disease and insects they may be turned under advantageously at this time. It is not well, however, to turn under tree leaves, especially such tough leavages as those from oaks. These make valuable compost when rotted, but usually require two years for proper decomposition. They should be collected and placed in a compost pile or pit maintained in a convenient location. Soil, wood ashes, lime and fresh manure should be mixed in the compost heap.

The fall is the time also to cut down asparagus bushes. This should be done after the foliage dies. The old canes of black raspberries also should be cut out at this time. If there is reason to believe that the trimmings harbor disease spores or insects they should be burned. Rhubarb leaves should be removed in the late fall and the crowns mulched with straw or manure.

Improving Potato Seed.

The Wisconsin experiment station, among others, has been giving special attention to potato seed improvement and of late years is showing that proper storage of seed stock is just as important as the improvement of seed. For several years the main effort was to standardize the leading commercial potato varieties grown in the state. The number of the most approved varieties has been reduced to six, some of which give best results under the different varying conditions of climate and soil in different sections of the state.

When holding the seed stock for supplying growers in the spring with improved seed it was found by the station experts that the seed lost much of its value through the effect of improper storage conditions. To make sure of good and safe storage a cellar was built in a well drained hillside. The walls and roof of this cellar are of concrete construction. Both walls and roof were then lined with lumber, which provided an air space of one and one-half inches. This cellar, with a storage capacity of 3,000 bushels, has now been in use for three years and has given excellent satisfaction.

that the wheat is not put in bags that are infested with smut when carrying it to the field and be sure that your drill is disinfected with formalin and dried thoroughly before drilling the wheat in.

The hot water treatment for stinking smut of wheat and smut of oats consists of soaking the seed in hot water at a temperature of 132 degrees to 133 degrees F. for ten to fifteen minutes. This consists of some means of heating the boiler, such as a large kettle or boiler, three large barrels or vats, pails or baskets with perforated bottoms, sacks and a good thermometer.

A good thermometer is absolutely necessary for all hot water treatments, as the use of an instrument which is not accurate will result in injury to the germinating powers of the grain on one hand or in failure to prevent the smut on the other.

The baskets can be made by perforating the bottoms of ordinary galvanized iron or tin pails or small tubs with numerous holes, or special galvanized iron baskets may be ordered from the tinsmith.

These should hold from a half to a bushel of grain, and the bottom should be made of strong, fine wire screen or of closely perforated tin plate. The holes should not be so large that kernels of wheat will go through. Two such baskets are sufficient, but three or more often prove convenient.

The barrels are numbered 1, 2 and 3, respectively. Hot water from the kettle or boiler is poured into barrels Nos. 1 and 2 until they are a little more than half full, and cold water is put in No. 3. The temperature of the water in barrel No. 2 is then brought to 133 degrees F. by pouring in cold or hot water as needed, while the water in No. 1 is kept at 115 degrees to 120 degrees F.

Four Years of Sudan Grass.

Sudan grass, introduced by the department of agriculture and first distributed in 1912, has proved remarkably successful as a hay crop in the middle and southwestern states, and the acreage now planted is very large. Numerous related varieties have now been secured from Africa and are being tested, especially the dwarf varieties with larger grain that may be harvested like oats.

Inoculation.

In first experiences with a piece of land inoculation should always be tried on all legume crops, such as peas, alfalfa, clover, beans, etc., leaving a check strip without inoculation of soil or seed. The reason for this is that there are yet unknown conditions that affect inoculation, and each farmer should test it for himself.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

An Expert Tells Mothers How to Avoid and Prevent This Scourge.

The following statement was issued recently by Dr. Charles F. Bolduan, director of the bureau of public health education of New York city:

"Infantile paralysis is caused by a very small germ, perhaps the smallest germ known, entering the brain and spinal cord of little children. The germ probably gets in through the nose or mouth. It is important to keep your children away from those who have the disease and also away from the other members of the family in which the case has developed."

"The reason for this is that the germ is in the nose and throat of the patient and frequently is carried there by others in the household."

"Read the list of addresses where the disease has occurred and which are published in the newspapers, and keep away from the infected houses."

"Every mother should keep her children about her much as a hen looks after her little chicks. It is dangerous to let children attend parties and festivals and to take them into crowds where they may sit alongside of some person who has the germs in his or her nose."

"Since the germs are so very small and may be present on the hands or the face or soiled handkerchiefs, even when there is no visible dirt, the utmost cleanliness is necessary. See that the hands and the faces of your children are kept absolutely clean. Soap and water, after all, are the greatest foes of all disease."

"Clean up your house. Throw away all useless rubbish. Take down the curtains and wash them. Wipe all the woodwork with a damp cloth."

are ordering them in large quantities for their different houses.

Furs and laces go together, and, with the deep fur collars that are to be worn on all kinds of coats fastened high in the neck when they are closed, but turned well back from the throat when they are open, the lace is almost indispensable. The materials used are many and varied. There are fine mulls and lawns, silk nets and nets of other kinds, fine nets and those with a coarser mesh, nets with small over patterns and nets with lace borders made in single and double frills and falling straight or with drop corners to give the effect of points to agree with the many pointed effects that are seen on gowns and coats and wraps. Georgette crêpe is also much used.

Silk and satins will be combined with the softer materials. The smart black stock will appear with its fall of cream lace and possibly a little white above to soften the effect near the face. There are a few wires necessary to hold the stock in place, but the general effect is of the softest.

Deep collars of all kinds are among the things the shops are displaying, and they are in many styles with smaller ones for the woman who cannot wear a broad collar. They, like the stocks, are of all the thin, washable materials with fancy edges of different kinds, ruffles or flutings.

White broadcloth is a smart material for wear with wool gowns, and in a deep collar is simple and rich combined with satin, heavy lace and made in simple lines.

A Challenge.

What do you know about the Hall electrochemical production of aluminum, the Acheson process for manufacturing carbondium, the Wilson method of applying acetylene industrially, the Lovejoy & Bradley plant for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, the Gayley invention of the dry air blast in iron making, the Herreshoff method of electrolytic copper refining, the Frasch process for refining crude oil? Patrolling Eight Miles of Fence.

To prevent wolves, coyotes and other wild animals from entering a pasture where experiments in sheep raising were being conducted hunters employed by the forest service were required to patrol eight miles of fence twice a day in the Wallowa National forest, in Oregon.

Two thousand five hundred and sixty acres of choice land were inclosed to conduct experiments with a view to ascertaining whether it was more advantageous to care for sheep in pastures than to herd them on the open range. A coyote proof fence eight miles in length inclosed the pasture. It was made of woven wire about four feet high, with two strands of barbed wire across the top.—Popular Science Monthly.

Will any person having old kid gloves, no matter how worn, or what color, short or long, please send them to Mrs. F. F. Miller, to be forwarded to England. The pieces cut from these gloves are sewn into interlinings for vests for the men in the Navy. Should it not be convenient to send direct to Mrs. Miller, parcels may be left at Wallace's Drug Store. Will you please look after this matter at once as the appeal is urgent.

John Crawford, Tamworth, departed this life on January 7th, aged seventy-five years. Deceased had not complained of not feeling well and attended church at Erinsville. He died during service. Deceased was born in Ireland and came to this country with his parents, when but six months old, settling on the farm he always resided on until his death. He was universally known, loved and esteemed by all creeds and classes, for his kind and generous disposition, considering others always, rather than himself. There are left to mourn his bereaved wife and five children, James, Erinsville; Mrs. M. Meagher, Read, and John, Manie and Carrie at home.

Hon. Martin Burrell's Appeal to Farmers

For two years and a half, war, red and ruinous, has raged through the world, and still no decision has been reached. There is reason to hope that before 1917 closes the struggle for liberty will have been won, or greatly advanced. Amid the varying phases of this titanic conflict, the fact stands out more clearly than ever that agriculture is of supreme importance. Extraordinary measures are being taken by the allied countries to increase and encourage production. It is earnestly hoped that every farmer in Canada will strive to increase the food supply of the Empire. A still powerful and unscrupulous enemy openly avows its intention to try and sink all ships carrying supplies to England during the coming year. In the tremendous strain yet to come, a vital factor will be an ample and un-failing flow of food to England and France. No matter what difficulties may face us the supreme duty of every man on the land is to use every thought and every energy in the direction of producing more, and still more.—From the Agricultural Gazette for January, 1917.

TO MEET THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The Canadian Northern Railway has inaugurated a system in its Dining Cars designed to meet the requirements of the traveller desiring a moderate meal. Table D'Hote prices: breakfast 25c., 50c., 65c.; luncheon, 35c., 50c., 75c., 80c.; dinner, 50c., 75c., 85c., $1.00. More elaborate meals may be had A La Carte if desired.

Passengers are supplied with menu cards about thirty minutes before each meal is called, from which it may be ascertained what dishes will be served, and the cost of same.

The steward will be pleased to give any information and offer suggestions if required.

This system has been in effect for a short time only, but it has been patronized to such an extent as to ensure the complete success of the scheme.

Another original feature introduced on all its Transcontinental Trains is a "Travellers' Shop" in charge of the porter in the Observation Cars.

The stock consists of a complete list of articles the traveller is likely to forget, or overlook, in packing up for the trip, or might desire to purchase as an afterthought. Everything from shoe laces and collar buttons to smelling salts and bon-bons are obtainable.

The patrons of the road have already shown an enthusiastic appreciation of these, two of the many original features characteristic of the progressive policy under which the C. N. R. operates.

FLYNN-WHALEN.

On Tuesday, January 23 quiet wedding took place in the Church of St. Anthony of Padua, when Jennie Elizabeth daughter of Mrs. Thomas Whalen came the bride of James Tamworth. Rev. Father officiated. The bride, who was in blue georgette and metallic and rose trim petunia satin hat to mate assisted by Miss Elizabeth the groom, who was bearded in nigger-brown suit with match. The groom was Mr. Jack Whalen, brother of the bride. The groom's gift to the bride was a silver tea set, a bridesmaid, amber gold chain to the groomsman, a pen and to the organist, a O'Mara, a gold pin set with diamonds. After a reception at the bride's mother, where immediate relatives were present, the young couple left for Toronto, their return they will reside worth.

Grace Church Notes.

The entertainment given Church on Tuesday evening the auspices of the Ladies pronounced success. The from beginning to end was every item was good, and excellently. But the feature of the evening, however, was the title, "The New Minister." The plot was a meeting of Aid, just prior to the coming of the New Minister; and the conversation of the meet toward the minister's wife, tried to determine the type of the minister's wife they desired. The dialogue ensuing was most interesting and amusing. The last part—Mrs. W. J. Jewell, Oliver, Mrs. Thomas Symington, R. J. Smith, Miss K. Sharpless, Mrs. Fred Yorke, Green, Mrs. M. S. Madole, (the minister's wife,) and Mrs. John (the acting President,) received praise, and reflected credit. Church, and Mr. A. E. Palmer much amusement by his remarks. And the play all the greater in the fact that much of what was original with our ladies having been founded on a appearing recently in the Guardian. Much credit is given to C. A. Wiseman for the successful entertainment.

TOO MUCH FOR HIM.

He Admits He Can't Grasp His Wife's Ideas of Economy.

"I can understand," remarked the office philosopher to the visitor to his sanctum, "most of the feminine traits and characteristics that puzzle the ordinary man, but when a woman begins to practice economy she leaves me lashed to the mast and quivering with helpless astonishment."

"Of course, the whole sex is economical. You have to admit that, because every woman says she is economical, and no gentleman would undertake to dispute a lady's statement—at least, no gentleman of my acquaintance would undertake to dispute it in his own house. What—to use a vulgarism—gets my goat is the method they employ."

"Take my wife, for example. Whenever she tells me she is going to economize I emit a single agonized shriek, and then leap for the tall timber. Her plan is to think up a whole lot of things she cannot possibly do without, and then do without them. By this device she saves at a single stroke the cost of the entire list. Having thus accumulated a surplus, she naturally proceeds to spend it, and she is always prepared to prove she has saved much money in the process."

"There is no answer, or no answer worth making. On occasions of this kind it is my custom to pass, for, without looking at my hand, I know I can neither trump nor follow suit."

Character Analysis.

"Bliggins goes around asking so much advice that he never accomplishes anything."

"Yes," replied the man whose mind lingers in the past, "not enough initiative and too much referendum."—Washington Star.

THE BELLEVILLE BOYS' WORK CONFERENCE.

The Belleville Boys' Work Conference was a great success, especially for the Napanee boys.

The following are the Napanee boys who were in attendance.

M. Daly, G. Reid, L. Douglas, R. Douglas, C. Campbell, L. Wartman, H. Dunbar, M. Wolfe, H. Baker, J. R. Purdy, J. Cameron, F. Graham, H. Wilson, C. Scott, D. Scott, G. Root, W. Judson, L. Madill, R. Huffman, B. Sine, V. Jones, C. Card, E. Rose, H. Russell, C. Denison, W. Cline, and Mr. A. C. Baker.

The officers of the Conference elected were:

President—M. Hertity, Belleville.
Vice-Pres.—D. Duesberry, Belleville.
Secretary—H. Crews, Trenton.

The principal speakers were: Taylor Statten, National Boys' Work Secretary Y.M.C.A. of Canada; Mr. T. H. Hutchison, National High School Club Secretary, Y.M.C.A. of Canada; Mr. P. C. MacLaurin, Principal Belleville High School and President of Belleville Y.M.C.A.; and also Dr. H. A. Yeomans, of Belleville, ministers representing the following churches of Belleville: Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Anglican.

Number of delegates present 187: Belleville 69, visitors 118.

The following places were represented: Napanee, Trenton, Deseronto, Tweed, Sterling, Toronto, Belleville, Strathcona, Madoc.

Object of the Conference: "To have every teen age boy taking up the Canadian Standard Efficiency Tests by 1920."

At the close of the Conference Mr. Clarence Scott was elected Secretary of the Napanee Delegates, and the Napanee boys drew up the following resolutions:

1. To get all classes of teen age boys in Napanee organized.
2. To boost with all possible influence the Canadian Standard Efficiency Tests programme.

The C.S.E.T. and what it is:

It is a programme of Religious education for Canadian older boys, prepared by a committee of representatives from all protestant denominations in Canada.

This programme is based on the boy life of Jesus, which we get from Luke 2, 52—"Jesus increased in wisdom (meaning intellect) and in stature (meaning physical) and in favor with God (spiritual) and man (social)."

If you were to study the C.S.E.T. Booklet you will see that the efficiency tests are worked out in an endeavor to associate the spiritual with each part of the four-fold development.

If you are now interested in this work it will greatly benefit you if you attend the meetings which will be conducted by the boys of the different churches and Sunday schools in the near future.

A Message to Young Farmers

It is your Duty either to ENLIST AND FIGHT or to PRODUCE MORE FOOD. This is a matter every young farmer must decide for himself.

But if you select to stay at home it is your duty to raise all the food you can. To help you in this endeavor, a four weeks' short course in

will be held at

SELBY; January 23rd to February 16th, 1917.

The course will deal with practical problems that confront the farmer in this County. It will make of you a better farmer. The young man who intends to farm as his life-work is entitled to an education the same as the doctor, lawyer, etc.

The Course is FREE. Send for a copy of circular giving outline of lectures and all particulars, or better, call in and talk it over with
